Shallow placers are most primitive in their nature, and require for their working only cheaply-obtained and inexpensive implements. Natural forces have thrown up the rock which contained the gold; therefore, unlike vein mining, only a simple washing is needful, in order to obtain the pure metal; while in vein-mining and deep placers complicated processes are necessary. The washing is accomplished in pans, rockers or sluices. The pan is usually made of cast iron, as it resists the action of mercury. The sides are sloping and its diameter is about fourteen inches. The rich earth is placed in the pan, which is dipped in water and shaken; the lighter particles float over the edge, and the stones and gravel settle on top; these are also swept off with the hand and thrown away. This operation is continued until the earth is washed out and the metal remains; or a little mercury is added to amalgamate the gold in order to prevent the loss of any fine particles. On a larger scale this washing is accomplished by means of a rocker, which is like an old-fashioned cradle, to one end of which a screen is attached to receive the rich earth. Water flows over the screen, while a rocking motion is continued.

Sluices are long, narrow troughs across the bottom of which bars are nailed, called "riffle bars." The "pay" dirt is shoveled in and water allowed to flow over the mass. The lighter particles are carried away by the current; while the gold, on account of its weight, sinks to the bottom and is amalgamated, either on copper plates or with mercury placed behind the riffle bars. Four-fifths of the gold from the California placers have been extracted by sluices, and this is the method employed where large quantities of earth are to be treated. Deep placers are generally worked by hydraulic mining.—Mining Stock Journal.

A Curious Question.

A very curious question growing out of the election in Calhaway County has been brought up before the Supreme Court of the State. At the election referred to there were two Democratic tickets in the field—the regular ticket, nominated by a formally-called Convention, and an independent or low-salary one, nominated by those who were dissatisfied with the first. At the Independent Convention an appeal was made to the people in behalf of the low-salary movement and ticket, and the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

"WHEREAS, There are plenty of good men, competent and honest, who are willing to perform the services of the respective offices of the county for the following compensation, viz.: Collector, per year.....$1,500
Probate Judge, per year.....1,200
County Clerk, per year.....1,200
Circuit Clerk, per year.....1,200

"Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we will support no man for the offices mentioned who will not agree to perform the services at the rate fixed in these resolutions."

The independent ticket nominated on this platform was elected—Samuel B. Collier, for Probate Judge, among other candidates. But Collier's defeated opponent, M. G. Singleton, claims that the election was illegal, and that Collier is an usurper of and intruder in an office which he has no right to hold. The grounds of this assertion are that the offer to serve as Probate Judge for $1,200 a year, when the lawful fees of the office amounted to $2,600 a year, was, in its nature, a direct bribe to voters; "that said respondent, in order to obtain votes for said office, publicly declared to said voters, on divers occasions during said canvass, that said fees amounted to $2,605 per annum, but that he would perform the duties of said office if elected for the sum of $1,200; that by electing himself as Probate Judge, and others for other places named as candidates on the aforesaid platform, they would save to the county '$5,600 per annum;' that respondent 'counted relators to be principal with the following heading thereon: "Low-Salary Democratic County Ticket,' and caused said tickets to be placed in the hands of said voters at said election, and by said words did further publish and proclaim to said voters his said corrupt offers, with the view of inducing said voters to believe that in voting for him for said office they would reduce the expenses of said county." The action is brought by Attorney-General Smith as relator, who, for the purpose set forth, asks for a judgment of ouster against Collier, that Collier should oust Collier, the decision virtually would apply to all the present officers of the county chosen last August, also to Larimore, the Representative, who was chosen on the Low-Salary ticket.—Missouri Republican.

The Distress in England.

The general distress throughout the country is becoming more and more apparent, and affecting all classes of society. Occasional incidents show more vividly than long histories what a condition we are getting into. Since the collapse of the Glasgow Bank, several of the oldest banking houses in the country have gone down, carrying with them numerous manufacturers who depended on them for their current resources, and the closing of their manufactories has thrown thousands of families into instant poverty and distress. Trade and commerce are the same everywhere that the oldest established houses are driven to reduce their rate of wages, and the trade strikes are almost every branch of business. The very docks at Liverpool are comparatively deserted, since the reduction of whose reduction of wages has led to a strike there, threaten to remove their ships to Hull or Cardiff, and elsewhere, where labor is cheaper. As yesterday it was announced that the celebrated ship-building firm of Penn & Co., at Blackwall, would close their Greenwich, had resolved upon a reduction of 7½ per cent., and the result is that their 2,000 workmen go out on a strike next Monday. The same thing is going on everywhere.

Some of the minor incidents of the great distress are absolutely heartrending. At a recent sale of the household furniture of one of the exploded financial concerns, a lady—I mean a real English lady, by title and descent—declared that in six months the company had stripped her of £70,000 (which means $350,000), and that she was now supporting herself and family as her mother, nearly 100 years old, by keeping a coffee shop in an obscure London street. The brother of one of the Glasgow Bank Directors, on hearing that they had been sentenced to imprisonment, literally took to his bed and died of a broken heart. But the saddest case of all is that of a well-known Liverpool merchant, eighty years old, who, after forty years of successful business, during which period he had been respected and honored, finding himself on a strait, succumbed to temptation, forged a bill of exchange for £1,000, and was this week sentenced to 10 years' penal servitude.—London Cor. Chicago Journal.

Dr. Schliemann.

Dr. Schliemann resumed last October the exhumation of the four prehistoric cities which he found lying one above another at Hissarlik, on the lowermost but one of which he has identified with King Priam's Troy. After carrying on his operations for a couple of months they were cut short by winter, and in December he paid a flying visit to London to add to the collection bearing his name at the South Kensington Museum his third share of the fresh finds. Among them may be mentioned a lot of gold vessels, those in terra-cotta, and above all a dagger of meteoric steel, found in the third Troy, which, after having first been turned up by him in any prehistoric city either in the Troad or the Peloponnesus. According to the last letters received by the archæologist's friends in London since his return to his home at Athens, he will resume his work at Hissarlik on the 1st of March, and continue it until the 1st of June. He has obtained from the Turkish Government special permission to sink shafts in the large conical tombs scattered over the Plain of Troy, and known to local tradition as those of the Homeric heroes, as well as in the Village of Koum-Kale. "It is true," he says, "that the six heroic tumuli hitherto excavated have given no result whatever: but I attribute the failure merely to the inexperience of the excavators, and I feel confident that, if not more, I shall at least find in each tomb the key to its chronology; nay, I venture to promise this even for those tumuli which have already been excavated." As to Koum-Kale, it is his firm belief that it covers the ruins of the ancient City Achilleion, mentioned by Herodotus, Strabo and Pliny.—N. Y. Tribune.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—If a person has smooth brown and crow's feet about the eyes, the latter do not denote old age, as many suppose, but they are the result of sleeping on the side. This a German physician of great renown has discovered. The pressure upon the temple and cheek leaves wrinkles at the corners and underneath the eyes.

—It appears that filtered raw petroleum has lately been employed as a lubricant on some of the Austrian railways, the volatile parts having been first evaporated at the boiling point of water, and a small percentage of vegetable and animal oils added. The first experiments made in this line were not attended with very promising results, the oil being too thin and the journals heating too frequently. By degrees, however, these difficulties have been surmounted—that is, the oil was improved and special boxes made to meet its requirements, petroleum being thus rendered a reliable lubricant.

—The remarkable metal known as wootz, or Indian steel, is now imitated with considerable success in some of the workshops of Europe, the process being as follows: small pieces of very good forged iron or steel are put in a crucible and covered with charcoal. Are carefully excluded, and the mass exposed to heat until it turns dark gray —carburet of iron; this is easily pulverized, and in that state it is mixed with pure alumina and subjected for a long time to a white heat in a crucible, when it becomes white and brittle. If one-sixteenth to one-twelfth of this white mixture is melted with some good steel, a very close imitation of Indian steel is said to be the result. Commercially speaking, the genuine raw steel or wootz comes in three forms, namely—in bullet-shaped pieces of a certain weight as they cool in the pots, and which come from Calcutta; in cakes of about two pounds and a half, from Bombay, and in cylindrical rods of about the same weight from Golconda. —N. Y. Sun.

A writer in the London Journal asserts that the "finest raw" silky luster, exhibited in the fracture of good iron, is only the effect of the light reflected from the innumerable cavities of the myriads of minute cells exposed by the fracture, the form of which cells, in their normal state, is spherical, or nearly so, but become changed in the process of rolling. That the mechanical properties of tenacity, ductility, etc., depend upon the quality and perfection of this cell system, is argued from the fact that a crystalline, malleable iron does not show any fiber in its fracture, nor simply a number of facets or planes crossing the cells at right angles, cutting them off short. The process of rolling iron into plates or sheets does not obliterate those cells, but merely modifies them, as they widen out under pressure; the thin partitions become laminated, and on the regularity of this lamination the quality of the plate very much depends. The cell system of copper is more perfect than that of iron, a result of the pouring of the copper into molds, but the cells are afterward altered by the pressure in rolling, etc., but never destroyed.

Animals Sensitive to Ridicule.

Mr. Sidney Buxton, in one of his amusing papers on animals in the Animal World for February, says that dogs and horses are, so far as he knows, the only animals sensitive to ridicule, while cats and birds are wholly unaware that they are being laughed at. He tells of a pony of his own which gets very curious when disparaging remarks are made upon him, and "reconnoitres and stamps about his stall, putting back his ears and attempting to bite, if it can openly be acted at, while these greatly pleases him. The truth is, that it is only those creatures which can feel sympathy with men which can also appreciate ridicule. The latter sympathizes evidently with many of his rider's feelings and amusements, while the dog can enter into most proportion of his feelings. But birds and cats, though often exceedingly affectionate, are entirely unsympathetic animals, hardly ever attempt to enter into human feelings — as Cowper's dog "Beau," for instance, entered into the poet's desire to possess himself of the water-lily. The hatred of ridicule always accompanies a capacity for sympathy, certainly dogs, and probably horses, know the difference between being laughed at in derision, as we laugh at a fool, and being laughed at in admiration, as we laugh at a good comic actor, and enjoy the latter as much as they resent the former. It is questionable, however, whether some parrots do not understand and enjoy the practice of making fun of their human companions—do not appreciate the art of duping, and take pleasure in it.—Spectator.

THE recent explosion on board the British man-of-war Thunderer was attended by some terrifying incidents. The gas from the explosion descended into the deepest recesses of the iron monster, and extinguished all the lights. The men between decks therefore found themselves suddenly plunged into Cimmerian darkness, without having the slightest idea of what had happened, the machinery meanwhile going full speed ahead. It speaks well for the discipline on board that no panic ensued. Some of the men in the turret at the time of the explosion held their hands before their eyes and thus preserved their sights, although the exposed parts of their faces were terribly burned.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—If you want eggs in winter never keep out ions. Wind a hen is three years old the best ans also can be put to is to be turned into the soup pot. No matter how well they are fed and attended to old fowls will not give eggs in winter. Give fresh water, and so prevent them from drinking snow water, which is very injurious to poultry.—Poultry Journal.

—A correspondent of an exchange writes that he has milked cows for thirty years, and has found many that were handy with their feet. The most effectual method of preventing kicking, he says, is the strap buckled tight around the body just forward of the hip bones and close to the forward teats. They may dance a little on first trial, but soon give it up and remain quiet. After using it for a time it can be dispensed with, as they stand quiet without it.

—How to Plant Potatoes.—The number of bushels to the acre must of course depend upon the size of the potatoes and the distance apart they are planted in hills they should be about three feet and ten inches apart each way, and if in drills from fifteen to twenty inches apart. If there is but a single eye in the piece it is sufficient, although some people plant them whole and others cut them in halves or quarters. We have cut them in halves and seen as much success with one eye each, and no potatoes ever yielded better, than those which grew from the small one-eyed pieces.—Western Rural.

—Pressed Beef.—Take about ten or eleven pounds of the thin flank, and rub well into every part two pounds of salt, and half a pound of saltpeter mixed with saltpeter dissolved; repeat the rubbing with the pickle every day for a week; and then roll it round and bind it with a wide piece of tape. Have ready a stewpan of sealing-wax weight as they cool in the pots, and which come from Calcutta; in cakes of about two pounds and a half, from Bombay, and in cylindrical rods of about the same weight from Golconda. —N. Y. Sun.

Training Steers to Work.

It is a well-trained mind which is fully equal to the task of training animals to labor, especially animals which cannot understand that labor has any result. It is not the nature of the ox or the horse to labor. It is little wonder, then, that he should be unwilling to labor until, by dint of sufficient training, he is brought into its practice from habit. Man, in training the ox or horse, however, whether steers or parrots do not understand and enjoy the practice of making fun of their human companions—do not appreciate the art of duping, and take pleasure in it.—Spectator.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, MAR. 11, - - 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New, York Mar. 1, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

In modern commerce where tangible land cash plays a comparatively small part in effecting the vast daily exchanges of property, the subject of credits is of paramount importance in the business world. "It's easy enough to sell goods, the thing is to get the pay for them," may almost be said to have passed into a commercial proverb. And well may it be so regarded, for statistics show that more than 80 per cent of all legitimate trade result from bad debts. A man cannot know everybody, and yet, in most cases, he has got to be ready to deal with everybody if he would not fall hopelessly behind in the commercial race. In view of these facts, it is hardly necessary to enlarge on the value of anything which tends to aid the merchant or manufacturer in this delicate and complicated matter of granting credit.

The one great instrumentality to this end, and the only one that is both complete save and effective, is the Mercantile Agency system, one of the inventions born of universal necessity which grows with the growth of the country, and which has in this country reached a development of which I venture to say not one in ten of the thousands who avail themselves of it have any adequate idea. I confess that I myself was more ignorant on the subject than I supposed until a few days ago, when I improved an opportunity which presented itself to look through the New York office of the Bradstreet Company, and witness the workings of its vast machinery. Bradstreet's, which I believe is now the foremost Mercantile Agency in the world, was founded just thirty years ago, by J. M. Bradstreet, who, with his son, conducted it for many years. In 1876, the founder being dead and his successor about retiring, the business was incorporated under the name of the Bradstreet Company, under the presidency of Mr. Charles F. Clark, who has been for more than twenty years associated with the concern. With regard to the improvements which this establishment has gradually introduced into the system, I shall say something further on; but first I think it may interest your readers to give a brief general outline of the institution.

To begin with, Bradstreet's differs from all other Agencies in being a single spreading organization, instead of an association of more or less independent concerns in various cities. It maintains thirty five completely equipped offices on this continent, and one similar office in London, England, besides keeping a great number of salaried agents in the smaller cities and towns of the Union, and several correspondents in Continental Europe. All this great network is under the individual control of the home office in New York. All its employees from Boston to San Francisco, and from Montreal to New Orleans, some twelve hundred in number, receive salaries directly from the company, and are subject to the strictest discipline. And right here I will call attention to the fact that this number of employees is something remarkable. There are, indeed, many establishments in the country—factories, machine shops and the like—where more individuals find work, but how many private corporations are there which require the services of a thousand brain workers?

As your readers are of course aware, the labor of this large force is that continual collection, revision and distribution of reports on the means and credit of each member of the American and Canadian business community. To give anything like a full account of the methods by which this great work is accomplished, to speak of the tact, skill, perseverance and judgement which the reporters must exercise, the unflinching care and watchfulness which must be displayed in noting the changes in each merchant's condition, the never-ending amount of detail involved in the writing out, registering, mimeographing and transmitting these reports and changes—all this would literally fill a volume. Some idea of the latter particular may be arrived from the fact the last edition of Bradstreet's Reports contains over 800,000 names of individuals or firms doing business in the United States and Canada, appended to each of which are symbols embodying the result of investigations which have cost time, trouble and money, oftentimes to a serious amount. The publication of this large book, which is revised and reprinted every three months, together with the semi-weekly sheets of corrections which are distributed to subscribers, may be said to be the principal work of the company. It is the most tangible result of its activity, and the one by which it is most generally known, but it is by no means the only one. The income printed rating, while affording an accurate general idea of the standing of its subject, is frequently insufficient in detail for the purposes of a subscriber, who thereupon makes application to the office for what is termed a "special report," which means all the latest information the company possesses regarding the person inquired about. The number of such applications received and disposed of by the Bradstreet Company in the course of a year is astonishing. At the New York office alone they average over a thousand a day. And here is best seen the advantages of the minute and machine-like system which governs every department of the institution. The applications are mostly made in person and require prompt reply; and twenty successive applicants may demand reports from twenty different subjects—several of the inquiries, perhaps, relating to newly fledged new clients who have but just started in business, and whose names, therefore, do not appear in the printed Report. It hardly seems reasonable to expect any institution to be prepared to meet such demands clear, as a rule, all these twenty appearers would be fully satisfied in a much less than that number of minutes, and be attended by another twenty, to be served in like manner.

The wonderful rapidity and accuracy with which this part of the work is done, and which gives the onlooker a queer sense of the company's commercial omniscience, are rendered possible only by the perfect indexing an arrangement of the millions of issue slips which make up this gigantic cyclopedia, and by one of the improvements in method introduced by Bradstreet's to which I made a passing reference above. This consists of a complete daily liter change, between all the offices in the chain, constantly being gathered by each. This is a costly plan to the company, but one which has greatly increased its usefulness to its patrons. Another improvement which has been introduced in the office here is true telegraphic communication with city subscribers, by which the latter can send messages to the Agency and receive replies from it without expense to themselves. The telephone, even, has been pressed into the service, and the company's operator is in actual vernal communication with subscribers a mile away. Their latest innovation, which renders Bradstreet's book or reports the most valuable of all works of this kind was the addition last year of a complete gazetteer to the original book. Under each State heading now appears an abstract of the collection laws of that State, also under each town heading the location of the place, whether on a railroad or stage line the population, and whether it contains a telegraph, post office, money order and express office, &c., &c. Still another improvement which, like those previously mentioned, and others which I have not the space to catalogue, is exclusive with Bradstreet's, is a system by which a patron who furnishes the Agency with a list of his customers is promptly notified of any change in the financial condition of any one of them.

The New York office of Bradstreet's occupies four floors perhaps 75x125 feet in size, and comprises, besides the great archive of a business going where over a hundred clerks are kept busily at work, a complete steam printing, lithographing and book-binding establishment. The expenses of carrying on this business are, as will be readily understood, very heavy. Its postage bill alone amounts to from thirty to forty thousand dollars a year, and its total annual outlay for the collection and distribution of the information in which it deals, cannot fall far short of three quarters of a million, and yet it sells to its subscribers the result of this enormous expenditure for from a hundred up to several thousand dollars a year, according to what is required. I venture to state that no merchant engaged in other than a strictly local trade can get half as much value for any other equal business outlay.

In a brief and hasty sketch like this I, can, of course, convey but an imperfect notion of this institution which has come to bear so important a relation to the business of the whole country. To sum up its nature and operation in a few words I can think of nothing better than to compare it to a combination of Argus and Briareus of old, whose hundred heads recur I what its hundred eyes observe. But even here the comparison fails, for while these heroes of mythology had but a hundred apiece of their characteristic members, Bradstreet's possesses both by the thousands, and is moreover distinguished by an intelligence and a degree of usefulness to which neither of those prehistoric monsters can rightfully lay claim.

CLIPPINGS.

Texas has 20,000,000 acres of land set aside for school purposes.

Ole Bull is living contentedly at Madison, Wis., very popular with his neighbors.

Brick Pomeroy has returned to La Cross from his financial lecturing tour as poor as a church mouse.

Congressman Baker, a new York friend of Conkling, says Grant is the only man who can break the solid South.

The yellow fever has broken out violently at Rio Janeiro; and it will probably be introduced into the southern states again by some vessel within the next three months, or as soon as hot weather reaches the gulf states.

The Boston Advertiser says that "only one in three persons on earth ever heard the name of Jesus, according to the Rev. Dr. Wilson, of the English missionary organization." Then they never stood by and listened to the address of the second mate when the deck hands were unloading a steamboat.

The biggest boy in the school at Tatnall, Md., disobeyed the mistress, who attempted to punish him. He knocked her down and went home. His father returned with him to the school, put a whip into the teacher's hands, and told her to chastise him all she wanted to, and she applied the whip until she fainted from exhaustion.

Old Zach Chandler is not an angelic being with a gossamer soul, but the Recording Angel will not write down the name of an honester man in his heavenly records. The sturdy old Michigander does not have his clothes made at Poole's, or follow the meridian line in parting his hair, but nevertheless, he will not steal, and he has the courage to brand the hand that does.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered Liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this. If you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Carter, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

ELECTION NOTICE!

STATE OF MICHIGAN } ss.
County of Charlevoix. }

Sheriff's Office, Charlevoix, Mich. Feb. 25, 1879.

To the Electors of Charlevoix County.

You are hereby notified that in accordance with resolutions adopted by the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Charlevoix County, at their annual meeting in October, 1878, and at their adjourned meeting in January, 1879. The undersigned gives notice that at the time of holding the next annual Township meeting, to wit: On Monday, April 7, 1879, the question of a tax of three thousand five hundred dollars, voted by said Board of Supervisors to aid in defraying the expenses of an iron bridge across Pine River will be submitted to you. Those voting in favor of such tax, shall have written or printed on their ballots the words "Upon the tax" and those voting against the tax shall have written or printed on their ballots the words "Against the Tax."

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand, the day and year first above written.

ON the night of the 27th ult., a sad and fearful disaster occurred at Carbon Hill, Ohio, a small place in the Hocking Valley. J. M. Lunsford, who kept a small store attached to his house, was awakened by fire and smoke at midnight, and at once set about removing his family. His wife and a baby, aged two years, were placed out of danger, and he then went to the store for the rest of the family, but he was overcome by smoke and suffocated. Within five minutes of the discovery of the fire, the building was completely enveloped in flames, and the shouts and cries of the poor victims (seven in number) remaining in the building were heard by the neighbors but could not assist at the fire, but they could not be reached, and the father and three daughters, aged twenty, thirteen and ten years, and three small sisters, aged seven, twelve and seven, perished in the flames. It was feared the wife and mother would become a raving maniac.

THE public-debt statement, issued on the 1st, shows the following: Total debt (including interest of $24,938,176), $2,473,560,-699 Cash in Treasury, $267,290,858. Debt, less cash in Treasury, $3,026,307,541. Increase during February, $311,411.

Personal and Political.

ON the 24th, the funeral ceremonies over the remains of the late Bishop Foley took place at Baltimore. The attendance of clergy and laity was large, and the exercises imposing.

ON the evening of the 23d, ex-Congressman Isaac Newton died at his residence in Rondout, N. Y. He was eighty-eight years old.

AT a meeting held on the evening of the 21st, the German Republican Central Committee of New York adopted a resolution requesting the President to veto the Chinese Immigration bill passed by Congress. The New York Tribune of the 24th contained a lengthy letter from Senator Blaine in reply to reflections cast by William Lloyd Garrison upon the Senator while he voted for the bill. Mr. Blaine justifies the adoption of the measure on commercial, sanitary and religious grounds, and advocates the protection of labor from the competition, not influences of Chinese immigration.

A LARGE number of citizens, who had assembled in a public hall, in San Francisco, for worship, on the evening of the 23d, adopted a resolution, to be telegraphed to the President, petitioning him to sign the Chinese-Immigration bill, as a measure vital to our civil peace, our business prosperity and our Christian civilization."

ON the morning of the 25th, at Chicago, Mme. Lachapelle concluded her task of walking 3,000 quarter miles—2,700 in as many quarter hours, and 300 in as many ten minutes. Her last quarter mile was made in 1 minute 59½ seconds.

F. P. DEWEES, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the National Greenback party, has addressed a letter to Thomas M. Nicholls, Secretary of the Honest-Money League, refusing to enter into the proposed public discussion of the Greenback question unless the Honest-Money League "can show that it is authorized to speak for one or both of the regularly-organized political parties."

IN a letter, published on the 27th ult., William Lloyd Garrison replies to Mr. Blaine, and attempts to show that the prescription of the Chinese is akin to the persecution of the negroes in the days of slavery. He denies that the treaty has been violated in the past by China, and denounces the whole anti-Chinese agitation as a development of the spirit of caste, against which, he says, anti-slavery men have made it the work of their lives to struggle.

ON the morning of the 27th ult., the New Orleans Times announced the contemplated resignation of Gov. Nicholls.

GOV. WADE HAMPTON, of South Carolina, resigned, on the 27th ult., and was immediately thereafter commissioned United States Senator.

AT a mass meeting of the people of San Francisco, on the afternoon of the 27th ult., resolutions were adopted requesting the President to shun the bill restricting Chinese immigration. Republican, Democratic and Workingmen's speakers addressed the meeting, and great unanimity and enthusiasm prevailed.

THE Democrats and Greenbackers of Michigan held their State Conventions at Lansing, on the 28th, and agreed upon the following nominations: For Supreme Judge, John R. Shiman; for Regents, George N. Sanford and Henry Whiting. The financial plank of the joint platform was as follows:

"That money should be issued in sufficient volume to meet the requisites of business; that the Government should regulate the value of money by preventing a uniform ratio between supply and demand, and that this delicate and important power should never be delegated to banks, corporations or individuals."

AN indictment has been found in the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Virginia, sitting at Danville, against five County Judges in Virginia, on the alleged charge of withholding from negroes the right of serving on juries. On the 28th ult., both houses of the Virginia Legislature adopted resolutions directing the Attorney-General to take proper steps to bring such proceedings before the United States Supreme Court for review and final adjudication. The action of the Federal Court was roundly condemned in the resolutions which were adopted.

On the night of the 1st, the President sent to the House, where the measure originated, his veto of the bill restricting Chinese immigration. A motion to pass the bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President, was defeated by a vote of 109 yeas to 76 nays—not the requisite two-thirds in the affirmative.

Foreign.

ACCORDING to London dispatches of the 26th, the cattle plague had made its appearance at Manchester and other places in England. The authorities have directed the immediate slaughter of the infected animals and all others adjacent.

A HEAVY storm prevailed throughout Italy, on the 26th. Venice was inundated from the sea, the water in St. Mark's Place standing thirty inches deep, and the canal from there to Naples was strewn with wrecks. The British steamer Sinetria was wrecked at Salerno, and eighteen persons were drowned.

ACCORDING to a Calcutta dispatch of the 2d, the Viceroy had received from Yakoob Khan a proposition for the renewal of friendly relations.

XLVth Congress—Third Session.

IN the Senate, on the 24th, the House bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept, for a voyage of exploration by way of Behring's Strait, the ship Jeannette, tendered by J. G. Bennett, was passed. The Army appropriation bill was further considered, and a lengthy debate ensued on the clause in regard to allowing railroads to use their telegraph lines for economical purposes, several proposed amendments being rejected, and one accepted, the clause as reframed in the bill reads: "And telegrams are authorized to be transmitted by railroad companies which have telegraph lines and which shall file their written acceptance of the restrictions and obligations imposed upon the Pacific railroads by Title 65 of the Revised Statutes, so far as the Government and the general public at rates to be fixed by the Government according to the provisions of Title 65 of the Revised Statutes;" the bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendments members except such as were III at 2:30, on the morning of the 25th, the Senate was called to order by the President pro tem., and, on the roll being called, a quorum failed to answer to their names. The Army appropriation bill was further considered, and after an executive session, the Senate adjourned.

The Army appropriation bill was further considered, and after an executive session, the Senate adjourned.

IN the Senate, on the 27th ult., Mr. Teller, from the special committee to inquire into the alleged violation of the Constitutional rights of citizens of the United States, submitted the report of the majority, and said the minority reserved the right to submit a report. Mr. Teller also submitted a resolution continuing the investigation, and, after a brief debate, it is to sit during the recess, but it was objected to by Senator Davis, who had been acting as opposition for the payment of arrears of pensions to soldiers during the late war; to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases, and for the protection of the Board of Health. A motion to suspend the rules and pass the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was carried by a vote of 2 to 1, and the bill was passed by the following vote: YEAS, 153; NAYS, 76; after reporting from committee and passed. A Conference Committee on the Army Appropriation bill was then appointed, and, on motion of Senator Davis, the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the Army Appropriation bill, and agreed to the conference asked by the House. Mr. Hiscock moved to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill amending the Postal laws, which, upon question, was rejected. The Senate Yellow-Fever bill was taken up, and a substitute was agreed to—25 to 20—for the amendment, establishing a Board of Health to consist of three officers in the service of the United States, and to attempt to establish quarantine regulations and make investigations; the bill, as amended, was then passed by a vote of 34 yeas, 13 nays—all the Republicans voting against the bill, as did also one of the members from New York; a motion to reconsider was made and carried, and the bill was laid on the table. The Chair laid before the Senate the President's Message vetoing the Chinese Immigration bill was read, and the question as to whether the bill should pass, notwithstanding the veto, was put, and resulted in the bill receiving 76 less than the necessary two-thirds in the affirmative, and so the bill was rejected. The report and resolutions for the impeachment of George C. Swayne, of the United States District Judge for the Northern District of Alabama, were presented by Mr. Hewitt, of Alabama, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Mr. Hewitt also presented the petition of Mr. Swayne, asking for an investigation into the charges against him. Mr. Hewitt also presented the petition of Mr. Swayne, asking for an investigation into the charges against him. Mr. Hewitt also presented the petition of Mr. Swayne, asking for an investigation into the charges against him.

IN the House, on the 27th ult., Mr. Blackburn, of Kentucky, introduced a bill to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, and to establish a Board of Health. After adjournment, the Senate reassembled at one o'clock, and a Conference Committee was appointed on the bill to amend the Internal Revenue laws. A letter was submitted, and its reception objected to, from the California Constitutional Convention, thanking Congress for the triumphant passage of the bill restricting the immigration of Chinese, and declaring that the Senators and members who supported the bill will receive the lasting gratitude of the people of California. A motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill extending David T. Corbin entitled to a seat as Senator from South Carolina, in place of M. C. Butler, the present incumbent, was defeated—yeas 25, nays 36—Senator Cameron (Pa.), voting yea; Senators Matthews and Patterson voting with the Democrats. The Army appropriation amendments to the Deficiency Appropriation bill were agreed to. The Senate amendments to the bill reported from the Committee on Elections declaring that Hon. Frost Thorn is not entitled to a seat in the House from the Fifth Congressional District of Texas, and that Hon. John H. Reagan is entitled to the same, were agreed to—Mr. Reagan having been elected to the Senate. The Senate amendments to the bill to provide for the payment of arrears of pensions was taken up, and an amendment was agreed to providing that no pension shall commence from the death or from the time of actual disability, previous to the time application be made prior to July, 1880; other amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended, was passed—86 to 24. The Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was then considered, and several amendments were agreed to. The Deficiency Appropriation bill was received back in the House, and the Senate amendments were non-concurred in—the vote on the amendment providing for the Republican Mail subsidy failing by a tie—all the Democrats and the Republicans voting in the negative. The House then asked a Conference on the bill, and the Speaker announced the following Conferees: Messrs. Wood, Atkins and Hiscock, Democrats, and Messrs. Frye, Hale and Conger, Republicans. The Army Appropriation bill was then taken up, and a long discussion ensued on the amendment appropriating $250,000 to supply the deficiencies of the Department of Justice for the present fiscal year. Mr. Hiscock moved to strike out the clause relating thereto, and to insert an appropriation of $50,000 as a sum to defray the expenses of the United States Courts in the Southern States, pending the investigations and prosecutions of election crimes, which was rejected—yeas, 94; nays, 98; after reported from committee and passed. A Conference Committee on the Army Appropriation bill was appointed, and, after the evening session a motion was made to go into Committee of the Whole, with the understanding that the Senate amendments relating to the Supervisors in the United States, and with the consent of the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, all the bill, as amended, was passed. The River and Harbor Appropriation bill was also considered and passed. The vote by which the Arkansas-Pensions bill was passed was reconsidered, 70 to 69, and the bill was laid upon the table. Amendments extending the provisions of the bill to widows and soldiers of the Mexican War, was also reconsidered by a vote of 72 to 68, and the bill was passed—yeas, 151; nays, 73—and sent to the Senate for concurrence. The Senate bill granting relief to certain persons who, during the late war, were employed in the Treasury Department, was taken up, and, after debate, was passed

The President vetoed the anti Chinese bill on the 1st, and congress has failed to pass it over his veto. The President will no doubt cause the treaty with Pekin to be so modified as to correct the evils aimed at by the bill.

In 1876 the Democrats of Michigan declared that "coin is the only money recognized by the traditions of the Democratic party as warranted by the constitution." And now the same party has swallowed the greenbackers, body and breeches.

The Republican State Convention held at Lansing on the 6th, was a harmonious and earnest gathering. They nominated the following ticket. Justices of the Supreme Court, Judge Campbell; Regents, E. O. Grosvenor, of Jonesville, and James Scherer, of Bay City.

The man who married a whole family in Traverse county. He married a lady with whom he lived two years, when death took her from his arms. He then married her sister, with whom he lived five years, when she also died. He is now married to the mother of two former wives.

The President got all ready to veto the River and Harbor appropriation bill, and had his message written, when an intimation of his intentions reached Senator Chandler, and that gentleman moved upon the executive works. Mr. Chandler declines to be interviewed as to what passed between himself and the President on the subject, merely remarking, "I told him it wouldn't do" and when we his arguments were, they accomplished their purpose, and Mr. Chandler didn't take his eye off the chief magistrate till the bill was signed.

Large droves of cattle have of late impeded traffic over the Union Pacific railroad in Western Nebraska. The surrounding country is covered with snow to the depth of several inches, and the railway, at exposed points where the snow has been blown off, affords the only bare ground suitable for having lodging purposes, for miles around. One or two engines have been wrecked in attempting to force a passage through the blockade, and trainor are now run through the region only in daylight, when the cattle are away rooting under the snow for a substance.

The Democratic party of Michigan has formally, through its states convention, swallowed the inflation, greenbackism, "National Greenback" paper money platform and ticket, shoved down its throat by Misses W. Field; but it is not possible that hard money Democrats—honest Democrats, who hold to the time honored old Democratic financial and constitutional principles—can so ignominously, completely, and vainly lay their manhood in the dust, and vote to sustain such a platform and ticket. Those who of them will either not vote at all, or vote for the reputable, strange, and unlike, sound, honest money platform which will be put in the field by the Republicans.

The Fusion.

The Democratic and National parties of this state have coalesced. The basis is a Democratic surrender to the National Banks of everything but the framework of the party organization; the conspiration is the hope of improving the national prospects of the Democracy in 1880 by overcoming now, through this device, Republican allegiance. At the convention held at Lansing on the 27th, they nominated the following ticket For Justice of the Supreme Court, John R. Shipman, of Coldwater; for Regents of the University, George P. Sanford, of Lansing, and Henry Whiting, of St Clair. The character of the coming contest is now clearly determined. It will be in new phase the honest money fight of last year. The Michigan Republicans will hold again the lost of national finance and the public faith they defended so magnificently in 1878, and they will win another signal victory. They will be aided by Democrats who will not surrender their convictions on such vital questions, and by Nationals who will not help on Democratic plottings.

Old Zach to the Front.

The following is a verbatim report of the speech of Senator Chandler delivered on the 24 on the arrears of pensions bill:

MR. PRESIDENT — Twenty two years ago to morrow, in the old hall of the Senate, now occupied by the Supreme Court of the United States, I, in company with Jefferson Davis, stood up and swore before Almighty God that I would support the Constitution of the United States. Jefferson Davis came from the Cabinet of Franklin Pierce into the Senate of the United States and took the oath with me to be faithful to this government. During four years I sat in this body with Jefferson Davis, and saw preparations going on from day to day for the overthrow of the government. With treason in his heart and perjury on his lips he took the oath to sustain the government that he meant to overthrow. Sir, there was method in that madness. He in co-operation with other men from his section, and in the Cabinet of Buchanan, made careful preparations for the event that was to follow. Your armies were scattered all over this broad land, where they could not be used in an emergency. Your fleets were scattered wherever the winds blew and water was found to float them, where they could not be used to put down the rebellion. Your treasury was depleted until your loads, bearing six per cent, principal and interest payable in coin, were sold for 88 cents on the dollar for current expenses, and with no buyers. The proposition were evidently made. Your arms were issued under an apparently innocent clause in an army bill, providing that the Secretary of War might, at his discretion, sell such arms as he declared it for the interest of the government to sell.

Sir, 18 years ago last month I sat in these halls and listened to Jefferson Davis deliver his farewell address, informing us what our constitutional duties to this Government were. They he left and entered into a rebellion to overthrow the Government that he had sworn to support. I remained here, sir, during the whole of that terrible rebellion. I saw our brave soldiers, by thousands and hundreds of thousands, aye, I might say millions, pass through to the theatre of war, and I saw their shattered ranks return. I saw steamboat after steamboat and railroad train after railroad train arrive with wounded. I was with my friend from Rhode Island (Burnside) when he commanded the army of the Potomac, and saw piles of legs and arms that made humanity shudder. I saw the widow and orphan in their homes, and heard the weeping and wailing of those who had lost their dearest and their best. Mr. President, I little thought, at that time, that I should live to hear in the Senate of the United States eulogies upon Jefferson Davis living—a living rebel eulogized on the floor of the United States Senate. Sir, I am amazed to hear it, and I can tell the gentlemen on the other side that they little know the spirit of the North when they come here at this day and with bravado on their lips utter eulogies on a man whom every man, woman and child in the North believes to have been a double dyed traitor to his government.

We can sell you a good clock for $2.00 Fox, Rose & Buttars.

FOR SALE.—That large brown house, in this village, on south side of Round Lake, known as the Clifford House. Is for sale. For terms apply to E. H. Green, Real Estate Agent, Charlevoix, Mich.

We spent Monday evening with the Petoskey Band, at their room. They number ten mpath pieces, and under the skillful leadership of Prof. Will Smith, they execute difficult music with a grace and ease that it is a treat to listen to. The boys all understand their business.

WE made a hasty trip to Petoskey and Little Traverse this week. We found our editorial brethren of both places rejoicing in good health and plenty of business, whereat we rejoiced also. That prince of lumbjords, Mr. Cushman, of the Cushman House, Petoskey, met us at his door with the usual cheerful welcome, and treated us during our stay with his usual courtesy. Petoskey is on the up hill track.

THE APPROPRIATION.—Col. Mansfield writes Mr. Nettleton of this place, that he shall expend the $12,000 of Charlevoix harbor funds as expeditiously as "red tape" will permit. He proposes to add one hundred feet to the south pier and fifty feet to the north pier, but asks for suggestions Mr Nettleton will recommend that this plan be reversed, as observation has forgot him that the north pier should be the longest. The pier work will cost in the neighborhood of $5,000, leaving $7,000 to expend in dredging Col. Mansfield says he will make a great improvement in our harbor the coming season.

CAPT. CLIFFORD, of the 5th U. S. Infantry, well known in Charlevoix, was, through the petty malice of another officer, arraigned before a Court Martial on a trumped up charge, at Fort Snelling, lately, and the finding of the court unanimously acquitted the Captain. The following is from the St. Paul Pioneer Press:

Soldiers and citizens alike rejoice at the announcement of the restoration to his command of Capt. Walter Clifford, of the Seventh Infantry, in accordance with the unanimous recommendation of the court martial lately held in this city. Capt. Clifford's gallant record as a soldier, and his character as a gentleman, will not be dimmed by this temporary suspension from command.

FROM BEAVER ISLAND.

BEAVER ISLAND, March 4, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Times dull and plenty of snow. The only excitement here lately was on the arrival of the mail containing copies of your paper of Feb. 25th, which contained my last letter—"The Chairman of the Board" declares there will be "blood spilt," on account of your correspondent's exposing of some few of their unlawful acts. They have charged some eight or ten different persons with writing my last letter, but have not guessed the right one yet. As soon as they do I suppose they will commence that blood spilling will and pay, as they must know by this time that the people are in earnest, as in nearly every instances they are cool. I did not write it but it is true, and I can further it if necessary. The sooner these warbles come to the conclusion that bullie and blood spillers hereafter must take a back seat in Beaver Island, the better it will be for themselves or they might find out that we have a penal institution in Jackson for the benefit of such gentry.

During the last week a protest has been signed by a large number of our citizens to serve on the County Treasurer against the payment of the illegal Highway orders issued by the two Supervisors referred to in my last letter. Judge Goodwin, will be likely to settle the matter. During the late fall of snow the two Supervisors referred to above, set several men and boys to work shoveling snow out of the road in the town where they live, and this reported they have issued a large number of County orders for different amounts for shovelling snow.

Sheriff Miller, and Ed Bedford arrived home safe on Feb. 27th. Isaac Campbell, also returned from Petoskey with a sleigh at the same time. On Feb. 28 James H. Irving, of High Island, lost his horse, sleigh and some goods in the Lake, three miles west of Hog Island, while crossing from Cross Village to Beaver Harbor. He came on foot the rest of the way. Loss $150, to $200. No more deaths from "spitzbergen" since my last. X Y Z.

30 cent tea better than ever at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

The Cheboygan Tribune says that Rev. A. P. Morrison, of that place, is to deliver his lecture, "The Young Man of To-day," in Charlevoix next Tuesday evening.

MR GEO PENSZER, of Old Mission, writes as follows, under the date of February 28 to the Michigan Homestead of the fruit prospects in Northern Michigan:

Can we expect a full crop of fruit the coming season? I would from a mere casualism of our coldest weather to the present time: January 2, 7 degrees above. February 14, 2 degrees above. February 15, 3 degrees above. February 18, zero. February 26, 5 degrees above. February 27, 6 degrees below. These are all the days that the mercury has fallen below 0 degrees above zero.

Sweet cherries, Kittin's Black Tartarian and Yellow Spanish are all perfect yet. The more hardy fruits I have not examined. Traverse City papers, 20 miles from here, report a little colder weather but they are at the water level and do not represent the high lands about the Bay. In spite of all wise cautions, we begin to count our chickens.

REV. A. Barnard, some account of whose work among the Indians, at New Mission, we gave a few weeks ago, is now engaged in a translation of Moody & Sankey's gospel hymns for the use of the Indians. Some time ago he completed a first edition but this is exhausted, and now he proposes a large and more perfect work. It will contain the songs in English and Ojibbwa. Mr. Barnard has a small printing press upon which he does his own work, setting his own type and performing all the labor himself. The Indians curiously and successfully watch the process of the work in which they are so much interested.

Thus, with scarcely any help from outside sources, Mr. Barnard is devoting time and talents to this work that seems to give such small returns, for the Indian is a hard creature to reclaim and christianize.—G. T. Herald.

THE VETO MESSAGE.

President Hayes, in a Message to the House, Gives His Reasons for Disapproving of the Chinese Immigration Bill.

The following is the full text of the President's Veto Message delivered to the National House of Representatives, on the evening of the 1st:

To the House of Representatives: After a very careful consideration of House bill 2,444, entitled "An act to restrict the immigration of Chinese to the United States," which seems to me to be of great importance, in which body it originated, I return the same with my objections.

The bill, as it was sent to the Senate from the House of Representatives, was confined in its provisions to the object named in its title, which was to limit, but not prohibit, the immigration of Chinese to the United States. The only amendment to the bill proposed and adopted by the Senate was the insertion of the limitation of the number of Chinese passengers which might be brought to this country in any vessel to fifteen, and as this limitation was in proportion to the tonnage of the vessel, or to any considerable number of vessels, it was not objectionable, as I conceive, in principle, and its chief purpose and effect of the amendment was simply to add a limitation to an existing law, the limit of its absolute exclusion.

The bill as amended in the Senate was presented to me, from an independent and apparently disinterested source, and its terms and provisions appeared to me to be entirely unobjectionable, as they certainly were within the power of Congress to enact. Before considering the question, by this procedure of the act, the legislation and emigration of their citizens and subjects from the territory of the one country to the other for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents. The high contracting parties, therefore, join in recommending such legislation as may be necessary for the enforcement of this article. The Government of China also agrees to consider, whenever, and as often as the Government of the United States or Chinese subjects in China think it necessary, what other articles of voluntary commerce, such as opium, shall be absolutely prohibited entry into or export from China, and to adopt measures for the entry of the same, subject to such conditions as may be found necessary. The Government of the United States will, upon the receipt of notice, communicate to the Government of China the names of such articles as it may wish to have thus prohibited, and will prohibit the importation of the articles named from and after the time when the Government of China shall have taken the necessary measures to exclude them. The Government of China will exact from vessels of the United States or their consignees entering the open ports of China no higher tonnage dues than are exacted of the vessels of the most favored nation, and no other or higher duties will be exacted of American vessels or their consignees than are exacted of the vessels or consignees of the most favored nation. Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as voluntary emigrants or coming therein as the travelers, or residing or being within the territory of the United States, shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, but nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of the United States in China, nor upon the subjects of China in the United States."

As evidence of the liberal spirit in the light of the experience then influential in suggesting their adoption, all those but the fifth article was framed in hostility to what seemed the principal mischief to be remedied.

The introduction of Chinese laborers by methods which should have the character of a forced and servile importation, and not of a voluntary emigration, seeking employment, and there upon workers and in a manner consistent with the system of our institutions and supposed to be free from many of the objections justly urged against the importation of laborers under contract. Proposition, by the Government of China to those liberal principles of freedom in emigration with which we were familiar, and upon which we are so well satisfied, was agreed to in a forward manner, and the final article in the treaty, and other provisions in the future of greater security, have greatly resulted in the satisfaction and the permanent engagement of equal, if not of greater, numbers of Chinese to foreign nations, the immediate presence of permanent peace and good will between the two countries.

Whether, as in these have always been peace and friendship between the United States and China respectively. They shall not hostile or injurious action by the one against the people or property of the other, but shall exert their friendly influence to prevent such action by others. And if any such action shall occur within their territories they will severally exert all their power to repress it, and will punish those who may commit the same. Subjects of China may reside in the United States and shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities and exemptions as may be enjoyed by those who are or may become citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, but nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of the United States in China, nor upon the subjects of China in the United States."

They shall not hostile or injurious action by the one against the people or property of the other, but shall exert their friendly influence to prevent such action by others. And if any such action shall occur within their territories they will severally exert all their power to repress it, and will punish those who may commit the same. Subjects of China may reside in the United States and shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities and exemptions as may be enjoyed by those who are or may become citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, but nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of the United States in China, nor upon the subjects of China in the United States."

The first of these articles are made supplemental, provides for a great amount of protection for the persons both of the persons and property of American citizens in China and of Chinese subjects in this country. It is upon this ample body of the treaty rights and securities of our Chinese friends in this country depend. It is obvious that, were the rest of the treaty left in force, the withdrawal of these articles would voluntarily accept them by our laws and by the action of Congress in the bill before me, as thereinbefore set forth, would be a practical abrogation of the whole treaty. As the other high contracting party has entered into no treaty obligations except such as include the part denounced, it is substantially by our part of the very essential liberties the other party from the whole treaty.

I am convinced that whatever urgency might in any quarter of by any, believe be supposed to require the instant suppression of further immigration from China, in my judgment no such necessity exists as will make any treaty provision of the Chinese strong in this country, and no circumstances can tolerate an expulsion of our citizens from China, or a practical denial to them of the protection of person and property which is due to the most favored treaty and violations of law may be expected on the part of those who desire to profit by that outrage.

THE CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE.

The report concludes with finding that full effect was not given to the electoral votes of Florida and Louisiana; that Nortes, Sherman and others were not entitled to the certificates of certificate from Louisiana was forged as to two of the names, Brand and Clark acts, prior to it, and that Tilden and Hendricks received a majority of the Electors of the Electors and the real choice of the people at the last Presidential election.

MINORITY REPORT.

On the afternoon of the 3d, the minority of the Potter Investigating Committee presented their report. In it, while testifying to the equitable and generous spirit which characterized the decisions and rulings of the Chairman, they announce that their dissent from the views in the report of the majority, both as to the pertinence of the same to the investigation and to the conclusions expressed upon the testimony taken. While the Florida investigation was begun they had offered a resolution that the scope of their labors be limited, as well as being charged upon the Canvassers and returning officers, should be examined. This was voted down by the majority, although it was a matter of notoriety that both kinds of charges were made. While acknowledging the unfairness of the decision, the minority yielded and conducted the investigation in accordance with the wishes of the majority. They charge that the report of the majority is not confidentially to dissent from the action of the majority in affecting to report for whom the vote of Florida was given after they had refused to examine both sides of that very question.

THE OTHER INVESTIGATIONS.

While their work was in progress a publication was made of the testimony taken before the Republicans secretly manufactured another, antedating the publication by this same, but they could not reconcile the one previously made; how, having very little time to prepare it, they succeeded in getting the certificate perfect in form, and no mistake in the details. They defend the action of the Democratic members of the Commission had given the vote of Florida for Tilden, and that the vote of Florida was given after they had refused to examine both sides of that very question.

THE FORGED CERTIFICATE.

Treating of the forged Louisiana Electoral certificate, the report tells how the Vice-President, having had the two certificates before him,

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York Mar 7, 1879

Dear Sentinel,

The general working of this institution is unsurpassingly described, would fill a dozen letters. When I promised a description of the Custom House, I had in mind a general survey of its most prominent features connected with the daily collecting portions of its business without going into a minute personal exposition of the whole, and to attempt to do even so much in a single letter. At the present moment there are about 1,050 men employed, with an annual income for his services of about $1,500. A leading collector presides over each of the six or seven divisions, with a salary of $4,000. The Cashier and Assistant receive $3,000 apiece, while the surveyor of a most lucrative somewhat select position, with clerks and a department to himself, gathers in about $8,000. The naval officer is a dummy entirely here in contrast, like a wax figure in the Museum. The naval officer stands on a salary of $4,000. So much for the prominent personnel of the place.

With a little observation I learned in New York that an inspector is assigned to take charge of me. He puts the Government seal upon the baggage before the owners take it to his hands and under his control day and night. It is the inspector's duty to compare the goods removed from the vessel with the captain's manifest, which is a list of the cargo and the latter is not final play with the Government in the shape of smuggling attempts the customs officer has the right to break down partitions, tear up flooring, and take such other precautions to prevent fraud as he may deem necessary. Passengers must display the contents of their trunks and packers on the dock, and the owners and independent agents of those steamers under the ordeal, the greater number of dutiable articles the roving hand of the inspector discovers. When dutiable articles are found in the possession of would be smugglers, the goods are detained and taken to the secure room of the Custom House, and to recover the owner must pay the duty together with the original cost of the goods. In case of failure to do this, they are seized by the Government and confiscated. The income from this passenger traffic sinks into insignificance beside that derived from merchandise. A merchant, upon hearing that his ship is in, takes his invoice, which he has received by mail from the shipper of the goods, to the Custom House, where he compares it with the captain's manifest. The appraiser next shows his hand by making examination of the goods for the purpose of discovering whether or not the value upon them is a just one. If the appraiser decides that the merchant's prices are too low, the latter must pay duty on the valuation set by the former, and then, if he desires, he can appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington, for redress. If every thing is smooth sailing, the merchant receives his entry" from a clerk. On this entry are the marks and numbers of his goods and the amount of duty to be paid. This he takes to the cashier's office, where, upon the payment of the amount, it is checked together with a duplicate entry, to show the Naval Office that the collector has received the money. A permit to deliver goods is also issued in the cashier's division.

This division is the plum of the Custom House service. All day long the money pours into its offers in orderly fashion. The merchant or his broker places the money in a small, square green paper box, which is handed to a receiving clerk, who sits behind a high railing from passers-by. The clerk enters the amount on his blotter, together with the name paid on the entry, and then passes the box of money to the teller, who counts it and checks upon the entry. As a ticket the amount the merchant wrote when handing in the box. The receiving clerk, upon the return of the ticket by the teller, passes out the permit and the merchant goes on his way rejoicing. $400,000 or $500,000 in that form is less ordinary intelligence and civilization prerequisite to existence pervades important branch of the public service.

The Republican members of the House and two Democrats—Speaker Randall and Alexander H. Stephens—signed a petition in the President in behalf of Mr. Rainey, the colored Representative from South Carolina, asking that he be given some suitable appointment in the patent service. Rainey's term expired with the last Congress, and he was beaten at the last election by the free use of Democratic treasure bullets.

The contest over the organization of the two Houses of Congress when they meet in extra session, and matters connected therewith, are likely to cause much political excitement in Washington as has not been witnessed there for many years. Candidates for petty offices, especially about the Senate, are said to have already appeared in droves, and it is thought that, by the time Congress meets there will be nearly 10,000 of these hungry place hunters eager to get position on the House and Senate service rolls. But it will be a Democratic family scrimmage and squabble.

Who Were the Parents.

From the New York Tribune.

If the rebellion was not a crime, our dead have died in vain. If Davis is a patriot then Lincoln was none, and Wilkes Booth was a hero. If the chief of the Confederacy will go down to posterity as the peer of Washington, then ours was the crime in fighting against the cause which he represented, and justice will never be done until the consequences of the contest have been reversed. It is high time for these questions to be cleared up. Davis has already returned to political activity, and made a rather striking speech last Summer, denouncing the Government which gave him his life, and reminding the pardoned Confederates that in returning to the Union they made no promise of fidelity except to the old Constitution, as they understood its provisions before the Radicals had strained and distorted it. The present Government, he asserted, them was not constitutional, and they owed it no loyalty. But his Northern and Southern apologists in the Senate consider it to be greatly to his credit, first that he does not counsel a new insurrection at present, especially since the South seems to be in a fair way of getting all its wants without so much trouble, and secondly that he will not stoop to ask any favors of the United States.

An Astonishing Fact.

Always proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. B. Chevrain, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

A FIRE broke out in Reno, Nev., on the morning of the 3d, which entirely consumed the business portion of the town, the flames ceasing to spread because there was nothing left for them to feed upon. Every public building was destroyed, including churches, banks, hotels, and the Postoffice, the only structures remaining being the Masonic Hall and John Larcomb's house. Five persons are known to have perished in the flames, and many others were seriously burned and otherwise injured. Loss, $1,000,000; insurance, $150,000.

A FEW nights ago, at St. Louis, Lizzie Bond was thrown out of bed to feed the embers of a reluctant kitchen fire. The usual explosion followed, and the careless woman was fatally burned. In the same evening, while Mary Ann Jordan was reading by the kitchen table, the lamp standing thereon exploded, and the poor creature was fatally burned.

THE Secretary of the United States Treasury, on the 4th, issued another call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds, principal and interest to be paid on and after June 4. The call is for $7,000,000 coupon and $3,000,000 registered, a total of $10,000,000. The Secretary has also issued a circular, giving notice that when the outstanding 5-20 6-per-cent. bonds are covered by subscriptions to 4-per-cent. consols the latter will be withdrawn from sale upon the terms proposed by the Department circular of Jan. 21, 1879. Subsequent sales of 4 per cents will probably be made upon less favorable terms to the purchasers.

AN explosion of sulphuric acid in Lower Lamb Creek Gulfkey, near Nanticoke, Pa., on the 5th, killed three men and severely burned three others.

A PREMATURE explosion of nitroglycerine, at Dutch Gap, in the James River, near Richmond, Va., on the 5th, killed M. C. Hagerty, a Government contractor on the works, and four other men, and severely injured five or six other persons.

THE Dime Savings Bank, at York, Pa., suspended on the 6th. It was thought it would pay seventy-five or eighty cents on the dollar.

A CHICAGO jury have found John Lamb guilty of the murder of Officer Race, last October, and fixed the penalty at death by hanging.

THERE was great excitement on the Chicago Board of Trade, on the 7th, caused by a fall of five cents per bushel in the price of April wheat. The origin of the decline was the sale of over 1,000,000 bushels held by Young & Co., of New York city. Later in the day it was said that Keene's agent had broken the market on forged orders from New York. It was stated in the evening that the Telegraph Company had offered a reward of $25,000 for the discovery of the man who sent the order.

WASHINGTON telegrams to the New York Tribune of the 7th give an exposure of an alleged swindling scheme by which many persons had been induced to subscribe money for a mythical memorial to Bayard Taylor. John L. Astor and Peter Cooper, whose names appear among the subscribers, deny having signed the paper or authorized the use of their names in that connection. The appearance of their names on the paper had induced leading citizens in Washington and other cities to contribute to the enterprise.

THE Pension Office, in Washington, had received up to the close of business, on the 3th, 30,000 applications under the Arrears-of-Pensions act. They were being filed and sorted, and no action will be taken on any until the 4th of this month, when the work of adjudication will begin, and certificates will be issued to successful pensioners. Applications were coming in at the rate of 600 daily, and it was estimated that a total of 50,000 would be received, of which about 30,000 would probably be acted upon favorably. The first notice a pensioner will have of the allowance of his claim will be the receipt of a certificate which entitles him to the money, and which he can then get if it is in the Treasury and not other sise appropriated.

ON the 8th, the Secretary of the Treasury issued a circular announcing the issue of certificates of deposit of the denomination of $10 each in aid of the refunding of the public debt. These certificates will be sold for lawful money at par and accrued interest to date of purchase, and will bear date April 1, 1879. Purchasers are allowed a commission of one-eighth of 1 per cent. on all purchases from $1,000 to $100,000.

A FEW days ago, the body of a murdered woman was found packed in a trunk in the river at Lynn, Mass. The body was subsequently identified as that of Sarah Gibson, Miss Gibson, who was in Boston, sent to appearance in person and denied that the corpse was hers. Two women from Boston then identified the remains as those of a Miss Fanny McConologue, who was supposed to have gone West. Miss McConologue was subsequently heard from in San Francisco, and of course the corpse could not be hers, and the mystery remained as great as ever.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, is greatly excited over the subject of incendiary fires, of which not less than eight were started simultaneously on the morning of the 8th. Over 300 assistants were secured by the patrol.

A FLOOD in the region round about Huntsville Bay, Ind., the other day, was very destructive of railroad and telegraph lines, fences, outbuildings and dwellings. Two persons lost their lives, several others were injured and a great deal of stock was drowned.

Personal and Political.

JUDGE WHITAKER, of the Superior District Court of Louisiana, has ruled that the decision of the Supreme Court in the Anderson case is binding also in the case of Wells, Casanave and Kenner, members of the old Returning Board, and has discharged the accused from arrest under the recently-found indictment.

AT a mass meeting in Hollister, Cal., flags were hoisted at half-mast on the reception of the intelligence that the Chinese bill had been vetoed, and President Hayes was burned in effigy.

THE workingmen of San Francisco, to the number of 7,000, met on the Sand Lots, on the afternoon of the 2d, to consider the Chinese question. The President was roundly denounced by the speakers, and resolutions adopted to the effect that the bill vetoed by him was a piece of political clap-trap which the workingmen would have accepted for what it was worth and asked for more, but they did not consider the veto of sufficient importance to mourn over it, or strike a blow for it.

THE Judiciary Committee of the National House of Representatives have prepared a report finding that the charges against H. W. Blodgett, Judge of the United States Court for the Northern District of Illinois, are not substantial, but that the inquiry was warranted under the circumstances.

F. P. DEWEES, Chairman of the National Committee of the National party, issued an address to the people of the country, on the 4th, in which he declares that the separation from the old parties had inspired the Nationals with renewed confidence and courage. He advises through party organization and ways with it party success in 1880 can be assured.

THE California Constitutional Convention adjourned sine die on the afternoon of the 3d.

ON the 3d, at the municipal election in Portland, Me., the Democrats and Greenbackers united and elected their candidate for Mayor by forty-⁻ majority.

WHEREAS, The final adjournment of the Forty-fifth Congress without making the usual and necessary appropriations for the legislative, executive and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and without making the usual and necessary appropriations for the support of the army for the same fiscal year, presents an extraordinary occasion, requiring the President to convene the two Houses of Congress by proclamation of the day hereinafter fixed for their meeting;

Now, therefore, I, Rutherford B. Hayes, President of the United States, do, by virtue of the power to this end vested in me by the Constitution, convene both houses to assemble at their respective Chambers at twelve o'clock noon on Tuesday, the 18th day of March next, then to consider and determine such measures as to their wisdom, their duty, and the welfare of the people may seem to demand. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be fixed.

Done at the City of Washington this 4th day of March, A. D. 1879, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and third.

[L. S.] R. B. HAYES.

By the President:

WILLIAM M. EVARTS, Secretary of State.

IN pursuance of a call issued by M. M. ("Brick") Pomeroy, a National Greenback Convention met in Chicago, on the 4th, and held a two days' session. Ralph E. Hoyt, of Michigan, was chosen permanent President, and H. W. Dunstan, of Illinois, Secretary.

Mr. Pomeroy addressed the Convention on the evening of the first day's session, and gave a detailed account of his work as chairman of the Committee on Organization, in organizing Greenback Clubs, which now number 6,237 throughout the country. The platform adopted declares, among other things, that the Greenback dollar must be a legal tender in all cases, and be paid out and received as standard money; the General Government alone to issue money; that all United States bonds be immediately called in and paid in Greenback paper money, such money never to be converted into bonds; that all National Bank issues shall be at once withdrawn; that the trade dollar shall be recoined, and all other silver money remonetized; that the Internal Revenue tax shall be abolished; in favor of a graduated income tax; the election of Postmasters by the people; the prohibition of the employment of all prisoners or other servile labor; the establishment of a Labor Bureau of Statistics in every State; the abolishing of all class legislation; public lands to be disposed of only to actual settlers; eight hours to constitute a legal day's work; demanding the passage of such laws as will fully, justly and promptly protect the rights of the people, and of transportation companies; recognizing the mutual dependence of labor and capital, and deprecating attempts to antagonize them; that labor is the basis of all human wealth, happiness and progress, and must have equal protection by law; that usury must be abolished by National law; the homestead of a family, to the value of $2,000, never to be liable to sale for debt, no man to be eligible to the office of President or Vice-President for two consecutive terms. A National Executive Committee was appointed, composed as follows: Ohio, Hugh Preyer, Chairman; Nebraska, W. H. Deck; Indiana, Jo. Wasson; Texas, B. J. Chambers; Colorado, Joseph Wolff; Kansas, J. O. McKee; Illinois, M. M. Pomeroy; Vermont, C. E. Britt; Mississippi, H. Nelson, Jr.; Wisconsin, D. W. C. Priest; Rhode Island, J. C. Vallette; Pennsylvania, W. C. Plumer; Michigan, Ralph E. Hoyt; New York, John Cameron; Missouri, J. M. Lanham; Iowa, C. H. Jackson.

THE Wisconsin Legislature adjourned sine die, on the 5th.

THE Republican State Convention of Michigan was held at Lansing, on the 6th. Resolutions were adopted opposing any radical change in our present financial system, and congratulating the country on "the successful resumption of specie payments and the signs of returning prosperity in all branches of business;" inviting the co-operation of all men "who are in favor of financial honesty and a safe and sound basis for the business of the country." James V. Campbell was nominated for Judge of the Supreme Court, and E. O. Grosvenor and James M. Shearer for Regents of the University.

ELIHU BURRITT, the learned blacksmith, died, on the night of the 6th, at his home, in New Britain, Conn. He was sixty-eight years of age.

ON the 6th, in the Illinois House of Representatives, an immense petition said to be 900 feet long, and to contain 110,000 signatures, was presented, asking for local option, and also that women of legal age be allowed to vote on the question of license. This is the "Home-Protection" petition, and the signatures were secured by the ladies of the Illinois Women's Temperance Union.

A FEW years ago, E. L. Smith, Manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company of Topeka, Kan., was put under arrest by the State House of Representatives for refusing to give to an Investigating Committee of that body the telegrams sent from and received at his office in regard to the late Senatorial election in the Legislature. He was set at liberty on the 7th by a unanimous vote of the House. Mr. Smith had been under arrest for 6 number of weeks, and persisted to the last in his refusal to yield to the demands of the committee, claiming that to comply with such demands would be a violation on his part of a sacred trust.

THE Cabinet at Washington declined, on the 7th, to appeal the following members of the National Board of Health: Surgeon-Gen. Woodworth, of the Marine Hospital Service, to represent the Treasury Department; Medical Director Francis M. Gunnell, of the Navy; Solicitor-Gen Phillips, Department of Justice, and Asst-Surgeon John S. Billings, of the War Department.

AT its recent session, in Chicago, the National Butter, Cheese and Egg Convention re-elected J. F. Jones, of New York, President for the ensuing year, and R. M. XLVth Congress—Third Session.

CONSIDERABLE discussion was had in the Senate, on the 3d, on the proposed amendment to Mr. Shields' amendment to the Arrears-of-Pensions bill, declaring that no pension should be paid under the act to Jefferson Davis, after which the amendment was agreed to—25 to 22. the Shields amendment including widows and sellers of the Mexican War, in the provisions of the bill was then rejected—26 to 22 —after which the bill was again passed—34 to 3. A new Conference Committee was appointed on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill. Conference reports were agreed to on the River and Harbor, Fortification, Indian, Army and Sundry Civil Appropriation bills. The Teller Committee was authorized to sit during the recess, to continue the inquiry into the alleged violation of the Constitutional rights of citizens during the late elections. The House amendments to the bill providing for the taking of the Tenth and subsequent Censuses were agreed to, and the bill was passed. Bills were also passed: House bill for the relief of settlers and others becoming totally blind in the service of their country, making appropriation for the payment of claims reported by the Southern Claims Commission; House bill to provide for the relief of the blind. The Conference Committee, appointed at the instance of Mr. Matthews, reported a full investigation of the charges and specifications of unconstitutional conduct at the late election, and that the Committee had been refused information in many instances, and that the statements were true, and that the charges guilty of no offense in connection with the election, with an amendment to the effect that the testimony, but the Committee reported the action in respect to James E. Anderson, an officer in whom no criminality in office, and under the circumstances, so wrong and injurious to the public interest. In the House, the Senate bills relating to incorporated settlements on public lands within railroad limits, Colfax county, were passed, as were articles of impeachment against George Seward with a recommendation to the Senate that the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, a minority report was also made, when considerable debate ensued, after which the bill was passed. It was also ordered that the Judiciary Committee was voted down—120 to 98.

AFTER a lengthy debate, the Senate refused, on the 4th, to recede from its amendments to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial and to the Army Appropriation bills, and they failed to pass. In the absence of the Vice-President, Senator Ferry was chosen President pro tem. A number of Pension and private bills were passed. It was also ordered that a bill to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States and to establish a National Board of Health. At the House, Representative Hiscock, of the Forty-fifth Congress, announced sine die. A number of bills were passed. The Senate bill to amend the rules and orders in the matter of the Electoral Count of Pensions bill was agreed to. Mr. Hewitt reported from the Conference Committee that they were unable to agree on the Army Appropriation bill, and asked for another conference. A report was made on all the questions in controversy except as to the Electoral Count, at the opening of which a lengthy debate, the House refused to yield its position on the Army bill, and they consequently failed to pass. The Senate bill to restore Fitz John Porter was shelved as a Brigadier-General on the retired list was passed—213 to 55. The Senate bill to relieve the charges against Judge Blodgett, of the Northern District of Illinois, was laid on the table, and that the House take no action thereon. The Senate amendments to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, with a number of House amendments, were disposed of, after considering the previous question on the Senate amendments, by the House refusing to recede, and the committee appointed to investigate the Indian Commissioner's report was instructed to report forthwith. Speaker Randall made a report to the effect that the committee had been unable to do so. The report was without even the semblance of truth, and was received with hisses. Mr. Randall was subsequently adjusted, and after a stormy and exciting scene and the delivery of strong political speeches by others, the House was declared adjourned sine die.

Ladies' Shoes.

Among the multiplicity of articles in the British Museum are some well-preserved examples of Egyptian sandals which are of particular interest, as they consist of plaited grass, slices of palm leaves over-lapping each other form the sole; these being bound securely together by a double band of twisted leaves round the edge. As a pad to the feet these sandals must have been exceedingly pleasant and graiseful in a hot climate. Ladies of rank in Egypt paid then, as now, great attention to the beauty of their sandals. In Western Asia, slippers left on the door of an apartment signify that the master or mistress, whoever may be therein, is engaged, and no one thinks of intruding, not even a husband, though the apartment be his wife's. A writer, speaking of the termagants of Henares, says: "If domestic or other business calls off one of the combatants before the affair is settled, she coolly thrusts her shoe beneath her husband and leaves both upon the spot, to signify that she is not satisfied." In this way she indicates that she has possession of the ground and argument during her unavoidable absence. A blow from a slipper was more dreaded by Musaulmans than a stroke from a sword, as the latter might bring death, it is true, but the former brought dishonor. Some of the earliest and most distinctive examples of adorning pretty feet are found in Jewish records. Thus in Solomon's Song (vii:1), the bride is thus addressed: "How beautiful are thy feet with shoes (sandals), O Prince's daughter!" In the case of Judith, of the Apocrypha, although her personal attractions, the splendor of her attire and other ornaments may have attracted the attention of the fierce Holofernes, the Assyrian General, it was her sandals that chiefly charmed him.—Public Opinion.

Specific Against Hydrophobia.

Dr. Grzyvals, of Krivoe Ozeroe, Podolia, Russia, for whose trustworthiness Prof. Gubler, of Paris, vouches, declares that, after a series of careful trials, which he describes at length, he has found that, after having had opportunities of treating 126 cases of men bitten by rabid dogs, with the Xanthium Spinosum, in has never, in any one of these cases, failed to ward off hydrophobia. He gives some startling examples. During the Crimean War, a family of twelve persons had been bitten by a hydrophobic wolf. Six of them entered his wards in the Hospital at Olschanks, Government of Podolia, District of Balta. They were treated with infusion of the leaves of exthanthium, and all recovered. The six others, who were treated by the actual cautery and the daily use of gouesstin in clusters and other drugs, died with hydrophobia in the course of twelve to sixty days. He recounts many other facts not less striking. For an adult, the dose is sixty centigrammies of the dry powder, repeated three times a day, and continued during six weeks. Children under twelve take half that quantity. The dose for animals is much larger. A herd of thirty oxen had been bitten by a mad wolf; eight had succumbed with symptoms of hydrophobia. The Commissary of Police came to Dr. Grzyvala for his "antirabic powder." He gave three ounces of the powder, with bran, daily to each of the remaining animals; none of them suffered from the disease. Those are examples of which Dr. Grzyvala says he has a hundred others.—British American Journal.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—The average number of pupils attending Rhode Island day schools last year is reported at 26,964; the enrollment of 41,003. There were 801 schools and 877 teachers. The average wages paid per month to male teachers were $63; female teachers received $45.83. There were 1,000 evening schools, with an average attendance of 2,112. The school receipts of the State were $709,-144.93; the expenditures, $679,770.96. The cost per capita of average attendance in the day schools was $16.19. In the town taxed for public schools on each $100 was ten cents.

—The Dunkers, who settled in Pennsylvania 160 years ago, no longer hold their land in common, but divide it up like other people. Their language has become so completely a patois of Dutch, German and English as to be no longer intelligible to persons of those nationalities. They favor celibacy, but don't enforce it. Men, women and children labor hard and long in the fields. They rise and retire very early, and eat five times a day. They keep the original Sabbath Day, and celebrate the Lord's Supper at night. At such times they go through the form of washing each other's feet as an act of humiliation.

—Bishop Whipple (Protestant Episcopal), of Minnesota, has issued a church letter on the subject of divorce, in which he says: "The decoration of the church building at Christmas being a custom as old as the Church itself in Virginia, may lawfully and properly be continued. The introduction into the church of evergreens and flowers at Easter, or of flowers, fruits or vegetables on Thanksgiving Day or Harvest Home festivals, is a novelty and an innovation in Virginia, and ought not to be done or allowed. The decoration of the Lord's table, pulpit and desk with cloths, of one color for some occasions, the different colored cloths being changed according to times and seasons, is a new and strange thing in the church of Virginia, and ought not to be done or allowed."

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THE STERN DRUGGIST.

I lithe and listen, gentles all,
A story of a merry knight
Of how the Customer had to pay
For the Pharmacist's show-case.

It fell toward the hour of six,
There entered at the door
A Customer the Pharmacist
Had never seen before.

He was a goodly man and tall,
And well-dressed, too, I ween;
And, sure, but he was the drunkest man
That ever walked on legs.

He was as drunk as bonds or bums,
Or Bibber's chum might be;
Tight as a brick, or as old Nick,
Or other simile.

His tongue it was four inches thick,
And on his face, the while,
He strove to frame a sentence, was
A monster unsmiling smile.

And he leaned upon the good show-case
And the Pharmacist upon;
Said something, although what it was
The Dreggist never knew.

"What would you?" said the Pharmacist.
And from his pockets drew
Awakening, said the Customer
After a long reflection pause,
Presently what he said before,
That which I will now close.

Then leaned his head upon his arms
And went to sleep again.
And while he snorted
Like an unquenchable engine snore
There came a burst of cracking sound
That show-case, where was it?

Then up and spake the Pharmacist,
"Eh, wake up there, I say!
Hello, you, but I tell you, wake,
And for that show-case pay!"
That show-case then had broken in
With real, real gold or brass, greenbacks,
Or notes of the National bank.
And the Customer half wakened up,
And stove to wins his eyes,
And said unto the Pharmacist
This word, "Disinhabit!"
This said he to the Pharmacist,
And fell sort on his arms again,
But turned him round unsteadily,
And lurched toward the door.

Then up and spake the Pharmacist,
"Ten hermes and nine blanks
Till then hast paid $12 cash!"
The rest of the show-case
And the Customer he blandly smiled
And made no more reply
But to matter that remarkable word
Again, "Disinhabit!"
And the Dreggist said unto himself,
He stopped not, nor he stayed,
And see if he hath the dimes.

Then, he, the Customer, he smiled,
And he had not searched but one pocket,
One pocket only of his coat
When from the clothes of his Customer
A wad of bills he drew.
A couple of one-dollar notes,
Some Dollar's thousand bills,
And three crisp, nice, new, clean greenbacks
In the outer marcel with L.

The Pharmacist put back the change
In the Customer his close,
And roused the Customer from out
A sound and balmy doze,
And the inebriate Customer
Essayed to open his eyes
And muttered that mysterious word
Again, "Disinhabit!"
And he lurched like a ship unmanageably
Unto the open door,
And staggered off along the street,
And that never saw him more.

VII.

And yesterday how mad the Dreggist was
To think he'd been sold
By pressing off a counterfeit
Bank-note upon himself!

A TALE OF THE GRINDEWALD.

The two Valleys of Grindewald and Lauterbrunnen opened out the grandest valley of Switzerland.

It was toward early spring, in 1798, consequently the snow had thick upon the mountains, and was preparing to descend in avalanches into the valleys. In that pass which leads from the Lake of Thun on the Wetterhorn and the Eigher, there were but few inhabitants. In the small number of Quakers in Northumberland, Pennsylvania, and a "monthly meeting" has been established in Scotia. Some time ago a Friends mission was begun at Mount Lebanon, and there are a score of members there.—N. Y. Evening Post.

trusted to the darling of their child and the protection of Kaiser.

The valleys around were deeply silent with that stillness which snow alone can give. It is like that profound quiet which is suggested by the idea of eternity. The woman started from her sleep and awoke her husband.

"Hark! Karl," said she. "Do you not hear?"

He roused himself.

"Nothing, frau," said he, falling back on his pillow.

Two minutes passed, and his wife again aroused him. He started up.

"Karl," said she, "there's a sound of horse-hoofs in the valley, and the howl of distant wolves from the Eigher."

The man leaped out of bed, threw the window open, and listened; he heard nothing—all was still; deep snows often break all sound. He turned to bed, and had hardly sunk into his sleep before the unmistakable sound of a horse, arrived at full pace, rested at his door.

"For the kind God's sake," said a voice below the window, "let me in!" A cry which was accompanied with an earnest knocking at the door of the hotel.

"Go, Karl, go!" said she to her unwilling husband; "there is some benighted traveler who waits outside; admit him."

Karl lazily rose and threw the window open. A man on horseback was below it, and close to the door.

"Open the door and open the door! in the name of the kind God! I am pursued!"

"By what?" said the host.

There was no need to wait for the answer, for the shrill cry of a pack of wolves on the heart upon the quiet winter's night in full pursuit of the terrified passenger who waited at the door.

The intense stillness around made the bay of the approaching pack more shrill and terrible as it was echoed from the gigantic peak of the Eigher and the snow-worn precipices of the Wetterhorn. The wail came now nigh, now low down the valley, but ever advancing and making of ravenous hunger and rabid ferocity. The air was piteously cold, and Karl, who possessed but little of the courage or true hospitality of a Switzer's heart, began to shrink from the thought, at such a perilous moment, of opening the door of his house, and from the rank work of expostulating with the agonized stranger.

"Open come down and open the door," said he, in his exceeding terror; "they will be upon me directly—I hear their howl now. They have pursued me all down the valley; my horse is worn out with the pursuit, and can go no further. Only come and open the door; you have but a minute for Pray—pray be quick!"

The wretched man uttered these words in broken sentences, while his eyes were fixed entreatingly on the window; but Karl's craven heart still refused to give him courage. There was a terrible story connected with bygone days, known by every part of the valley, of wolves having (driven by winter hunger) burst forcibly into a gentleman's house and devoured its helpless inhabitants before they were able to defend themselves.

While Karl and his wife, who still laid in her bed, with her teeth chattering with fright, were hesitating as to what to do, the wolves had turned the last corner of the road, and were close upon the heels of the traveler.

He cast one last, piteous look of despair upon Karl, burst upon his horse, and dashed away into the hollows and snows of the Lauterbrunnen Pass.

Scarcely had Karl time to realize that the hapless horseman was gone, than the whole pack dashed furiously past the inn in full and close pursuit. The sound was suspended at the still open window. He continued to hear the fast-receding hoofs of the horse, mingled with the still faster departing bay of the wolves.

At last all was still, except the low wailing of the little wind there was in the topmost boughs of the fir trees of the Grindewald.

The miserable man closed the window, and returned to bed, shuddering, as he deserved to do, at the thought of what might have happened by the time through what he had done.

Meantime, Fritz, having accomplished the object of his journey to Kandersteg, was returning home with Kaiser. The sky was alone, but overtaken more rapidly than he expected by nightfall.

He knew the valleys and the paths, ous pathways well, consequently had chosen a somewhat shorter route than the beaten road of the Lauterbrunnen Pass. He reached home about an hour after the event related above.

Fritz was much known in the neighborhood around, and considered one of the greatest glories of the Oberland; he was tall of his age, though slim, but very active. Though our work at present has nothing to do with love stories, Fritz did nevertheless love in the Valley of Kandersteg the fair Lena Louise.

It was in the depth of the snow winter of that celebrated year, when no traveler left his footmark upon the snows of the Grindewald Pass, and no foreigner cared to explore the solitudes of Lauterbrunnen.

Fritz had gone to Kandersteg, bold and fearless, with his staff in his hand and his pistol in his belt, with his dog Kaiser by his side to bark fearlessly, climbed the rocks which no youth on that side of the grand Shreidlech would have adventured, and which, perhaps, no Switzer, short of the Bruvent, would have touched.

Fritz was the pride of the valley; his father and mother were left alone in their little unfrequented inn, strong and comfortable inside, exposed to every danger and difficulty without; they were both in bed; it was the dead of night, toward two in the morning.

Fritz had promised to be home before midday. Anxious about him, they still father? Or what? Here Kaiser, Kaiser, come here, old dog."

The dog obeyed. The animal and his master had now entered the door of the inn. The door was immediately slammed to, and the pale, terrified host told the dreadful story to Fritz.

"My father, you have never sent that traveler away?"

"I have, boy. He was hunted hard by a pack of wolves, and we dared not open the house lest the whole pack had come in upon us," and the wretched man's teeth chattered in his fright.

"Oh, father, what have you done! It

The United States Four-Per-Cent. Certificates.

The Secretary of the United States Treasury has issued a circular calling attention to the 4-per-cent. refunding certificates of the United States to be issued under the provisions of the act of Congress approved Feb. 26, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt." A Washington dispatch gives the following particulars:

Each certificate will be of the denomination of $10, will be made nearly of the form and size of the United States note, and will bear on its face will lack the conditions of its issue. Such certificates will be sold for lawful money at par and accruing interest to date of purchase, by the Treasurer of the United States at Washington and by the Assistant Treasurers at Boston, Baltimore, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis and San Francisco, and the Treasurer of the United States at Washington and Assistant-Treasurer at New York will also receive in payment drafts in favor of themselves, respectively, drawn on New York, which will be collected, and the excess, if any, returned to the depositors.

The Secretary of the Treasury will also accept in payment certain certificates of deposit of National Banks specially designated to receive deposits on this account, but the refunding certificate will not be delivered until the certificate of deposit issued by the bank has been paid for in a Treasury draft or by deposit of a like amount with the Treasurer or some Assistant-Treasurer of the United States, or until United States bonds of an equal amount are substituted in their stead.

All National Banks, upon complying with Sec. 5153, Revised Statutes of the United States, are invited to become financial agents of the Government and depositories of public moneys accruing from such certificates. Moneys received by depositary banks for such certificates will remain on deposit with said banks, subject to the order of the Treasurer of the United States, and call for redemption of bonds will issue from time to time, as the Secretary may direct. All banks, bankers, Postmasters and other public officers, and all other persons are invited to aid in placing these certificates. They can make their arrangements through the National Banks for the deposit of the purchase money. Commissions will be allowed on the purchase of these certificates as follows: On the aggregate of $1,000 and not exceeding $100,000 in any one calendar month, one-eighth of 1 per cent., and any amount exceeding $100,000 in like period a commission of one-fourth of 1 per cent. on the excess, and parties purchasing at one time $1,000 or more of certificates will be entitled to receive them free of charge for transportation.

The certificates will be ready for delivery April 1, 1879, at which date they will begin to bear interest, which will be payable upon the conversion of the certificates into 4-per-cent. bonds.

The Secretary also announces that as soon as practicable $50 certificates will be issued under this law similar in form and upon like conditions to those above described, to be registered on the books of the Treasury in the name of the owner, which name will also be entered on the face of the certificate.

The form of the certificate is to be as follows:

No.	UNITED STATES REFUNDING CERTIFICATE.
$10.	April 1, 1879.
	This certifies that the sum of $10 has been deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, under act of Feb. 26, 1879.
	JAMES GILFILLAN, Treasurer of the United States.
	G. W. SCOFIELD, Register of the Treasury.

Washington, D. C.

Convertible, with accrued interest at 4 per cent. per annum, into 4-percent bonds of the United States, issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, and Jan. 20, 1871, upon presentation at the office of the Treasurer of the United States, Washington, in sums of $50 or multiples thereof.

On the back:

Interest on this note will accrue as follows: For each nine days, or 1 10th part of a quarter, 1 cent; for each quarter year, 10 cents; for each entire year, 40 cents.

In the Northern oil field of Pennsylvania fuel is scarce. Patent oil-burners have been invented, and in several factories and refineries oil is entirely used for fuel, and coal and wood are abolished.

THE Colorado Central Railroad will be supplied with steel rails through the canyons during the summer.

On the night of the 9th day of March Elihu Burritt, familiarly known as the "Learned Blacksmith," died at New Britain, Conn., about half a mile from the place of his birth. Having gone to the light of this world in that humble, rural place, and having gone out from it in the vigor of manhood to make his influence felt in many Nations, it was very fitting that he should come back at old age, like the tired child to his mother, lay down his life, where, more than sixty-eight years ago, he took it up.

Elihu Burritt is, perhaps, more widely known as the "Learned Blacksmith" than by any other appellation, a term descriptive of his vocation and attainments. But the title of Universal Philanthropist would better describe the whole man. The popular mind dwells upon him as paring over grammars and dictionaries, and deciphering strange words in hieroglyphical characters. But few even now among his own countrymen think of him as leading the best minds and the largest-hearted people of the civilized countries into a Congress of Nations, with no means to settle National disputes, and forever end the barbarous practice of international war.

Elihu Burritt was born in New Britain, Conn., Dec. 8, 1810. He was the youngest son in a family of five sons and five daughters—one sister now resides in Chicago, Mrs. A. J. Sawyer. We may know he is of a Puritan family from the Bible name by which his parents gave him. The Elihu of the Bible was one of Job's friends, a true friend, because he rebuked him, and against his self-righteousness, did "speak in God's behalf." The Burritt family came from South Wales to Connecticut in 1651; and in the time of the Revolution, which tried the souls of men, were a divided family; some remaining loyalists rewarded to Canada; but the branch of Elihu took sides with the rebels, and his father and grandfather carried their muskets into the War of Independence.

In the olden time of the Republic, before manufacture became a part of the American system, the private practice of all heads of families to secure a homestead upon the soil, a little farm or a large one, as suited their calling; the tailor, the hatter, the blacksmith and the shoemaker having their little farms, on which they labored such days as they could be spared from their trades. Elihu Burritt's father was a blacksmith of the old style, having a small farm, which he tilled, and his shoemaker's shop by the side of his broad kitchen fire-place. Elihu's brother was a blacksmith, and when he said he meditated running away and hiding himself from the world under an assumed name, in some obscure village.

He was now a public man, though continuing to work as a journeyman blacksmith.

In 1844 Mr. Burritt established the Christian Citizen. He also began preaching lay sermons to convicts, and took an active part in church revivals. This he found time to do while pursuing his labors as a blacksmith. It was about this time that the writer, a brother editor, first formed an acquaintance with Elihu Burritt. The latter received him with the heartiest cordiality, welcomed him to his sanctum, and made him at home. He had with him, in connection with the newspaper, a young printer by the name of Thomas Drew. He became his factotum. When he went out to lecture he addressed letters to his substitute, whom he knighted Ezekiel. Thomas Drew was the Ezekiel of the Christian Citizen, and became one of the most popular of attraction. Burritt wrote many charming articles to Ezekiel on all public subjects, and what he saw in his travels both at home and abroad. Many of the letters were written during Mr. Burritt's travels in England, where he went speaking in the interest of international amity and peace. When he returned he made a tour of the West, and paid his first visit to Chicago. He had been over the route before addressed an eloquent letter to the Chicago Mechanics' Institute. He was now preparing for the representation of the World's Fair to the Congresses. Charles Darkee, then a Member of Congress from Wisconsin, was the delegate of that State in the Congress at Paris in 1850, and Mr. Z. Eastman was the delegate to the Congress at Frankfort from Illinois in 1851—they being the only delegates for these years from the Northwest.

It was on his first visit to England that he wrote the "Pledge of the League of Universal Brotherhood"—a bond of love signed by more people of different Nations than perhaps any other bond or pledge.

At the breaking out of the Crimean War Mr. Burritt, feeling that his occupation was gone for the present, returned to this country and took up a work to which he thought he had a special mission. This was the endeavor to heal the bitter strife growing up between North and South on the slavery question, and he issued a publication of amnesty which he entitled "North and South," proposing the doctrine of compensated emancipation."

After the Civil War began Mr. Burritt returned quietly to England, avoiding there, as here, public life. He gave his attention to literary works, and completing his labors in good works for future reading. Then he made his journeys on foot, communicated in his letters to the press, "What I saw on John O'Groat's." In 1865 he was appointed United States Consular Agent at Birmingham, for the time a lucrative position.

For some years he has been residing at New Britain with his sister's family, where last week he died. He was engaged in preparing his last works for publication and in writing grammars and lectures for the study of the languages, which he leaves in manuscript to an institute of the town.

Elihu Burritt's goodness won him to the hearts of many people in many Nations. It is probably true of him, as has been said, that he had access to more English homes than any other American, and he lost by this popularity with the love and respect of his own countrymen.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

How Carelessness Men Can Be With Money.

My friend was paymaster of a large railroad company, and one day he went out with $40,000 to pay the men. The money was wrapped up in sc old newspaper, and his carried it under his arm. He stopped at a wayside hostelry for dinner, and left the money on a chair when he went out. He had not gone many miles from the place when he missed it. He flew back and asked the woman if she had seen a parcel. "There's a lot of newspaper on the chair beyond," said she; "perhaps that's it;" which it proved to be, and my friend returned a happier and a wiser man. Another circumstance: A man I know of lost a roll of bills amounting to $10,000. They, also, were tied up in a newspaper. He told a friend, and we two hied over the loss and the probability of finding the money. The friend made him tell all the ground he had been over since he had the money. The last place he was at was the Postoffice. The night was wet overhead and slushy under foot. They stopped at the Postoffice, and going to the place where the man had been, found two or three torn bits of newspaper. It was the same. They looked further, and found the lost treasure. It had been kicked in turn by every one who came into the office, and when found was all untied and completely soaked in slush. They seized it eagerly and returned to their hotel, where they spent several hours in cleaning it. It was all there, and at last they got it dried. The grateful man took his friend out and bought him the handsomest gold watch-chain he could find.—Cor. Boston Gazette.

—The Churchman condemns the practice of allowing and encouraging children to appear in tableaux, etc., upon a public stage, late at night, at entertainments for religious and benevolent objects. It says that the physical injury thus done to the children is great and inexcusable, but that the moral wrong is deeper and graver.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—Russian dissenters from the Greek Church are now computed at 15,000,000.

—There are now fifteen graduates of the Bangor Theological Seminary doing missionary work in foreign countries.

—The average monthly wages of male teachers in Illinois amount to $54.07; of female teachers, to $30.89.

—The educational system of New York State annually costs $11,000,000. There are 1,500,000 pupils in the schools, taught by 30,000 teachers.

—A pastoral has been issued by the Episcopalian Bishop of Western Michigan condemning worldly devices for the purpose of raising money for church objects.

—In reducing salaries of teachers and officeholders, there is one good thing about it. If they do not want the position when salaries are reduced, they can resign.

—There are now four Catholic Dioceses vacant in the United States—Chicago, Hartford, Marquette and Columbus. And if the resignation of Bishop Borgess, of Detroit, is accepted, it will make the fifth.

—A movement is understood to be on foot in New York to establish here a university for colored men, whose future work would be directed toward the elevation of their race in the South. The money has been offered, and nearly been pledged for its support.—N. Y. Independent.

—Potato water, or water in which potatoes have been boiled, is now recommended in various quarters as not only an effective but an immediate remedy for lice on cows and other cattle, also for ticks. The affected parts are to be bathed with the potato water; one application is generally sufficient. —A good bread pudding. The bread should be cut in the thinnest possible slices, and disposed in layers, with raisins (cut once in two) between, till the dish is one-third full; then fill to within an inch of the top with a custard made in the proportion of one egg and almost as well lie in its grave. If the season is all right, that is if the weather continues moist and warm, the seed may pierce through to the surface. If dry weather then succeeds, the surface is baked hard about the growing corn. If rains and somewhat cold weather succeeds the planting the seed rots, or comes up so weak that its subsequent growth is slow and feeble. Meantime the weeds are growing in the endeavor to choke the corn. The next modification of the corn-planter should be one that will enable the machine to open its trench not by pressing the earth downward and sideways, but in such a manner as will leave the earth in a natural state. The next thing is to drop the seed so that it will not lie in a nest like a crate of eggs, but scattered in a bed at least four inches in diameter. The seed must then be covered in such a manner that while the earth lies pressed about it, the surface is light and mellow. Thus planted good seed will always germinate, unless the earth is completely saturated with water for a considerable length of time. It may be too cold for the seed to germinate at once, but the heat will be in fair condition it will lie intact until the soil is warm enough to induce germination. This every market gardener knows who plants his extra early crop for green corn. The seed will often lie two weeks before germinating, and then come up evenly and strong. Some of the corn planters do work partially on the principle we have stated, but there is room for improvement.

The first work of the farmer about the time the corn should germinate is to thoroughly harrow the field. If it be not too trashy, this is considered, and with truth, the best cultivation the corn gets, and for the simple reason that it loosens the earth, squeezed tight from the corn to the surface and perhaps baked hard by the sun. For this very reason it ought to be harrowed across the line made by the corn planter. Then the corn cultivator follows still further, tearing this groove made by the corn planter, and at last the corn begins to grow, and makes a very good, indifferent or bad, according as the season permits working. It is a fact, however, that, one season with another, the average corn crop is less than it would be if properly proves) has the merit of being exceedingly simple, easily employed and without danger of injury to the cattle.—N. Y. World.

—A gentleman who has recently visited London tells of the remarkable influence of the Christian life in that country from the popular singing of the Moody and Sankey hymns. The same story comes from other countries as we have elsewhere. This modern American Sunday-School music, so much criticised and sneered at, is rapidly taken hold on the popular heart in America, Great Britain, Germany, Italy, South Africa, India, and the Islands of the Sea, such as no other music has had since the days of Jubal.—Chicago Tribune.

Spring Poetry—A Word of Advice.

There need be no doubt in the mind of any reader of the Free Press that it is eager to secure odes to spring, daffy-down-dillys, crocuses and blank verse on green grass and budding vines. In fact, we keep a traveling agent out all the year 'round looking after such things, and paying each down in every case. The trouble is to get enough of such poetry to supply the wants of our readers. Having said this much in explanation, we call the attention of the public to the following solemn fact:

In December, 1860, a lady in Kansas forwarded us a poem on spring, to be laid away under a brick until the 20th of March. She died within fourteen days after mailing the poetry. Comment is needless.

In March, 1867, a student at Ann Arbor forwarded a poem of forty lines on the return of the robin. Before his article had left the inkstand, however, or the poem could be printed, the student was called home to see his sister die. Does any explanation seem necessary?

In 1873 a lady in Elmira, N. Y., sent on eight verses of beautiful poetry on "April Showers." About the time the lecture-lecturer was saying that there was six cents postage due on her letter she was falling off a bridge near her home. She never spoke after being pulled ashore and wrung out. Truly, the ways of Providence are mysterious.

Last year a lawyer in Cleveland sent us a pound and a half of blank verse on the voice of the blue bird and the starting grass. He verses reached us one rainy Thursday evening, when all Nature seemed bent on having a good old cry, and the voices of ward politicians came up from the Sixth Ward with hollow moan, and next morning the West would be found dead in his bed. The terrible look on his face showed that he must have suffered for hours and hours. The Coroner's Jury returned a verdict that the Free Press must be held blameless.

One short week ago a young lady of Western Michigan mailed us a beautiful ode to dying winter. The old man who buys all the waste-paper from this office had accurately made an offer of a cent and a half per pound for the beautiful ode when a dispatch arrived saying that the poor girl had been tossed on the horns of a cow and had gone to join the angels.

As stated at first, the Free Press is eagerly searching for spring poetry, and offering more pay than any other publication in this country, but it must be explicitly understood that we cannot be held responsible for the sudden death of the writers.—Detroit Free Press.

Making a Corn Crop.

In the West everything on and about the farm, that possibly can be, is performed by or with the aid of machinery. It has been said, and with truth, that the farmer may now ride and do nearly all the work of the farm. Had it not been for this labor-saving machinery, the West would not now produce one half that it does, and yet in some respects our farm machinery is not what it ought to be. It enables a man to run over a largely-increased area, but at the same time it has diminished the yield per acre. This is especially true in the cultivation of corn. When the season is just right everything goes on smoothly; but not one year in ten is the season just right for a good corn crop, entirely machine-raised. When it is not, we have weedy, clodsy fields, and baking surfaces, the latter a most serious drawbacks to succeeding crops. This of late late years has given a great impetus to thrashing, a necessity long felt and earnestly advocated.

There are many of our best farmers who believe that a crop of corn may be raised more economically hand-planted, and once hoed by hand, than is accomplished with the average corn-planter, and snubbing-post cultivator. Let us look for a moment at the work of the corn-planters and the principle upon which many of them work. A groove is made in the earth, the seed is dropped therein, and the wheels following press the whole solid. If the soil is somewhat wet the corn might hatchet each, and in the course of events and time he discovered a cut on his cherished dwarf-pear tree. Suspecting the culprit and calling his posterity to him, "Boys," he said, frowning gloweringly,

Washington dispatches say that Senator Chandler's speech on Jeff Davis is one of a kind of any speech of the last session of Congress. One hundred thousand copies have already been ordered.

The tendency of the Republican party is shown in the return of Conkling, Logan Chandler, Carpenter, and others to the Senate. The tendency of the Democratic party is shown in the fact that its leaders and representatives now appear as the cohorts of Jeff Davis.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

The Wendell Phillips Club of Boston has resolved that it is "encouraged with an increase of the cause of human rights and the liberties of our brethren in the south as the most grand and conspicuous results of the U. S. Z Chandler lately made in the Senate of the United States."

The passage by the House at Lansing of the bill restoring the oil test in this state unanimously meets the demand of public opinion. The increased safety of the high test oil is not regarded by the people as an offset for its increased costs, and the preponderance of the argument is unquestionably on the side of reduction.

Pope Leo XIII. has ordered a general jubilee of the Catholic Church, to celebrate the anniversary of his elevation to the Papacy. The jubilee season began last Sunday, March 2, and will continue until Pentecost Sunday, June 1. This proclamation is in accordance with an old established custom, each succeeding pope waiting for one year after his election, when, if some time has elapsed since a previous general jubilee, he declares a season of indulgence throughout the entire Catholic world. The present is what is known as a special jubilee, or regular grand jubilee taking place every 25 years, and the last having occurred in 1875.

That Speech.

New York Cor. Chicago Journal.

Senator Chandler's great speech continues to be the topic of conversation in all circles here. It appears to have aroused the people as nothing else has to the fact that the old rebel elements represented by Jefferson Davis are rapidly regaining control of the Government, and, unless arrested, will soon exercise the power and supremacy which they lost by going into the rebellion. For years outside papers have endeavored to convey the impression that Mr. Chandler was a rough specimen of humanity who represented the worst element of the Republican party. The sentimentalists in the Republican party who have been decrying such brave men as Senator Chandler will now have to get to the rear, where they have always belonged. They and the men whom they endeavored to make leaders have given us evidence of what the Republicans may and the country would experience under their management.

The following article from the Oklahoma, Mississippi, Southern States of Wednesday, March 12, 1879, we copy verbatim, heedings and all, as a particularly candid specimen of Southern Democratic temper:

YES, THANK GOD!

We Have Captured the Capitol

After a struggle of eighteen years in war and politics, the Confederates have at last captured the Capitol.—Washington Republican.

Yes, thank God! we have captured the Capitol, and in 1880 our men will walk up the White House steps and take his seat in the Presidential chair.

Then will our glorious triumph be complete.

Then will we proceed to tear your Amendments from the Constitution and trample them in the mire.

Then will we break the shackle you have forged for the Free Sovereign and Independent Commonwealths of the Union.

Then will we recognize the right of secession,—a right that is not dead but sleeping:

Then will we decorate the Capitol with the pictures of Davis, and Lee, and Stuart, and all the glorious leaders of a Cause that is not but but living still.

Yes, thank God! we HAVE captured the Capitol, and from that cogne of vantage we propose to rule the Republic in a way that will make your Radical laws and your Radical leaders forever odious in America.

The Washington Post (Democratic organ) of Wednesday morning last, announced the following as the Democratic programme for the extra session:

The popular plan among the Democrats of the House, as expressed by those in the city, is the ordinar business to two appropriation bills. The legislative, executive and judicial bill will be reported and disposed of promptly, just as it passed the House. As a very prominent member expressed it yesterday, "not an additional 1 will be dotted or a t crossed." It will go to the Senate and be passed there with as little delay as possible. Meantime the House will do nothing—not even the army appropriation bill will be touched until it is seen what Hayes proposes to do. If he sees fit to approve the legislative bill, then the army bill will be passed as quick as possible, and Congress will immediately adjourn. Should Hayes veto the legislative bill, then the Democrats of Congress will conclude that no time need be wasted in fooling with him, and they will adjourn at once. If Hayes sees fit to call another extra session, it will convene, and enact the same programme over again, and even again, if necessary. The Democrats will not yield an inch, and are willing that Hayes to try the experiment of running the government without money if he wants to.

It will be difficult to get the House and Senate to adhere to any such plan. If five or six Democratic Senators should vote against adjournment, the plan would break down. Or if a few Democrats in the House should vote with the Republicans against adjourning without passing the necessary appropriation bills, the plan would break down. In short, this plan will not work unless every Democratic vote can be relied upon back to it at all hazards, which is not probable.

"A Clause in Its Way."

From Tom's Fo[illegible]

That little speech of Zach Chandler's, in the Senate, the other day, on the proposition to pension Jeff Davis, will go into the declamation books and boys will be speaking it for a century to come. It is quite a classic in its way. As a consequence of the speech, they are talking about Mr. Chandler for President, and the talk is becoming serious, too!

Michigan Gold and Silver.

It is needless for seekers after gold to pack their carpet sacks and flit away to the mines of Colorado or California, for the latest advices from the mines of Pennsylvania announce the discovery of the precious metals in the Menominee range, about 37 miles west of Escanaba. The Iron Port says that last summer the Emmet iron mine, owned by Judge E. B. Ingalls, Thomas & Bartley Breen, was opened. The ore is a rich hematite of all shades of color. Some time ago the owners became convinced that there were other minerals mixed with the iron, and had experimented on it a little themselves, but without obtaining any satisfactory results. Analysis of the ore had been made by different experts, but in each case a large percentage of residuum was left without ascertaining what its constituents were. Last week Tuesday three took three samples of the ore—one of the yellow, one of the brown, and one of the blue—to Chicago, and had assays made of each sample at the works of the Chicago Refining Company and was astonished to find that the yellow ore assayed $6.10 in gold and $12.77 in silver to the ton; the hard brown ore $4.12 gold and $16.25 silver to the ton, and the blue ore $3.25 gold and $10.50 silver to the ton. The settlement on account of this discovery is very great in the Escanaba region. As has been stated heretofore in the Era, Mr. J. J. Hagerman, of Milwaukee, thinks that this quantity of ore cuts no figure in the ton of ore will not pay, he does not believe it will, and proposes to test it. They hope, too, to find richer veins of the precious metals in the [illegible] Grand Rapids Eagle.

Matt. Carpenter is reported as saying that of the [illegible] seven seats thirty days it will prove the ruin of the Democratic party." The Peoria (Ill.) Democrat appears in agree with Senator Carpenter on that point, for it remarks, with great force: "Good-bye to the doom of the Democracy is sealed at the extra session. Mark what we say."

The Ann Arbor Democrat has a blood curdling story of the new court-house in Ann Arbor, which represents that new and costly edifice in the light of a haunted castle, with all the elements of blue lights, white robed phantoms, coffins, skeletons, supernatural whispers, and mysterious breezes. A little town like Ann Arbor, with over 1,200 students, is liable to be well provided with ghosts.

The Lansing Republican says: "When the Democratic party have no sincere representation on the ticket, but two regular Greenbackers and one man who has changed from a Republican to a Democrat and piled the lash heavily to whip all Democrats into the Democratic movement, and when the platform is so obnoxious to majorities of intelligent and influential Democrats, the hope of success must be faint for the coalition."

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this. If you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. H. Coutes, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

THE floor of Mechanics' Hall, North Berwick, Me., where a town meeting was being held, on the forenoon of the 10th, suddenly gave way, and fifty persons were precipitated to the floor below. No one was killed but many were fearfully and probably fatally hurt.

A MARRIAGE ceremony was performed by telegraph at Xenia, Ohio, a few days ago, between John A. Smith, at Wichita, Kan., and Miss V. B. Longfellow, at Xenia.

AS PAUL BOYTON, the man who has undertaken to float from Pittsburgh, Pa., to New Orleans, in his life-saving suit, was approaching Bellipolis, Ohio, the other day, a man took him for a rare water animal, and leveled his musket at him. Boyton's cries saved his life.

A FIRE in East St. Louis, early on the morning of the 9th, caused the burning of ten buildings. The charred bodies of four persons were found in the ruins. The fire was incendiary in its origin, and a mortgageholder and his watchman have been arrested for the crime.

WARM weather and heavy rains caused severe floods in the vicinity of Buffalo, N. Y., on the 10th. Bridges over the Cazenovia Creek were carried away. A family of four persons, living on the flats in South Buffalo, had their house carried away, and were forced to take refuge in trees until relieved by boats.

THE Fall River (Mass.) Gas Manufacturers' Company have fatted in consequence of irregular paper issued by Charles S. Strikover, the Treasurer, amounting to about $100,000.

RECENT letters from Leadville, the Colorado Eldorado, strongly advise intending emigrants to stay at home. Business is largely overdone, and thousands are without employment and suffering from the lack of food.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made, on the 11th, that the Treasury Department, in Washington, will be prepared to issue, on April 1, in addition to the ten-dollar certificates, receivable from bearer and convertible into 4-percent. five certificates, to be registered in the name of the owner and receivable only by order or transfer properly attested.

A TORNADO passed over the southern portion of Macoupin County, Ill., on the 11th, causing the destruction of a great deal of property and the loss of several lives.

A BOSTON dispatch of the 11th says that, of the fifty vessels belonging to the Gloucester fishing fleet, exposed to the tempest which swept the Atlantic Coast on the 29th of February, fourteen foundered, and 146 persons lost their lives. Three left forty-one widows and over 130 orphans. The vessels lost were valued at $75,000.

THE Manhattan Savings Bank of New York, which was robbed, some months ago, of nearly $3,000,000 of its securities, resumed business on the morning of the 12th.

ON the 12th, during the progress of the great pedestrian contest in New York, which began on the night of the 9th, between O'Leary (the champion), Rowell of England, Harriman of Boston, and Ennis of Chicago, O'Leary utterly collapsed and broke down and was ordered from the track by his physicians, as was immediately removed. So completely was he used up that it was thought very doubtful whether he would ever walk again in a pedestrian path. The score stood as follows a short time before O'Leary's withdrawal: Rowell, 291 miles; Harriman, 284; Ennis, 271; O'Leary, 216. Rumors that O'Leary had been drinking, that he had been poisoned, etc., were denied by his physicians, who say that his failure to keep the track was simply because he was used up. Some accounts say his withdrawal was evidently the result of drinking and a general disregard of training rules. On the night of the 12th, a portion of the gallery in the building in which the contest was going on gave way and suddenly sank with a crash, many of struggling persons who had crowded into it. A panic ensued, and the scene that followed was a frightful one. Many persons were injured, some seriously. The pedestrians continued their walking as soon as the debris was cleared from the track.

THE Secretary of the United States Treasury, on the 12th, issued another call for 5-20 bonds to the aggregate amount of $10,000,000—$7,000,000 coupons and $3,000,000 registered. The principal and interest will be paid on and after June 24.

IN the Naval Appropriation bill, which passed the Forty-fifth Congress, authority was given the Postmaster-General to introduce and furnish for public use double letter-sheet envelopes and postal cards, on which postal stamps of the denominations at present used are to be placed, as constructed as to allow a blower to be used for sound to be returned in the same envelope or on the same card—the former to bear two three cent stamps and the latter two one-cent stamps.

AN amended circular was issued by the Treasury Department at Washington, on the 13th, inviting all Collectors of Customs, Surveyors of Customs acting as Collectors, Receivers of Public Moneys, Postmasters of money order offices, and all other public officers of whatsoever character, to become agents for the sale of the ten-dollar certificates authorized to be issued by the act of February last, commission to be allowed and bond requisitions.

A TERRIBLE explosion occurred in the Mahoning Powder Works, near Danville, Pa., on the 18th, by which the building was completely destroyed, and Willis Lloyd, one of the proprietors, J. J. Evans and J. C. Mowrer were instantly killed, their mangled bodies being scattered in every direction.

SEVEN men were hanged in this country, on the 14th: John Q. Pinkham, at Concord, N. H., for the murder of Mrs Berry, in January, 1877; William H. Derlin, at Lowell, Mass., for the murder of his wife and infant child, in January, 1877; Henry Granville, at Windsor, Vt., for the murder of Herbert O. White, in 1876; a Chinaman, at Marysville, Cal., for a murder committed last November; a Mexican, at Pueblo, Col., for murder also committed last fall, and two men named Etienne Avery and Archie Breese, at Portland, Ore., for the murder of Louis Johns last August.

THE great pedestrian match for the championship of the world in Gilmore's Garden, New York, was concluded on the evening of the 19th, and resulted in the victory of Rowell, the Englishman. He covered 500 miles; Ennis, 475 miles, and Harriman, 450 miles. Total receipts of the match are stated to have been $61,000.

A MAN named Peter Klein, charged with the perpetration of a horrible outrage near Newport, Ky., a few days ago, was arrested in Cincinnati, on the night of the 19th, and taken across the river into Newport. On the evening of the 16th, a large crowd of indignant citizens took possession of the prisoner by force and hung him to a tree until he was dead.

A GREAT number of negroes from Vicksburg and other portions of Mississippi have recently come to St. Louis, Mo., being persuaded thereto by the promise of receiving subsistence there and transportation to Kansas, where they were to receive Government land, etc. The promises were not fulfilled, and there was great destitution and suffering in consequence.

Personal and Political.

THE Indiana Legislature adjourned sine die, on the 11th, in accordance with the Constitutional provision. The Governor immediately issued his proclamation convening a special session to meet on the 13th.

AT the recent election in Bangor, Me., the Republicans elected their candidate for Mayor by 146 majority. At Biddeford the nominee of the Greenbackers and Democrats was elected Mayor by a majority of seven.

ON the evening of the 10th, Cyrus W. Field gave a brilliant reception at his residence in New York City, in honor of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the reception of the enterprise by which Europe and America were united by the Atlantic cable. Over 1,000 guests were present.

AT a meeting of the Brooklyn Presbytery, on the 10th, it was decided to try Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage on the following charges, presented by the committee appointed at a previous session: Deceit and falsehood in statements regarding his withdrawal from the editorship of the Christian at Work; in stating that sittings in the Tabernacle were free; in securing J. W. Hathaway of dishonest practices, and then denying it; of falsehood in collecting subscriptions for the payment of the church debt; of deceit in the difficulty concerning the organist of the Tabernacle, and of stating that he was to be arraigned for heterodoxy, when he knew such was not the case.

ON the 10th, at a meeting of the Baptist ministers in San Francisco, a resolution was adopted striking the name of Rev. H. W. Reed from the roll of the Baptist Ministers' Meeting of San Francisco and violently condemning him for misrepresenting, before the Baptist Ministers' Conference of New York, the facts and the sentiments of the Baptist and Christian people of the Pacific Coast touching the Chinese question.

THE new Constitution of California, which is to be submitted to the judgment of the people in May next, contains articles empowering the Legislature to enact laws protecting the State from the evils and burdens arising from the presence of alien vagrants detrimental to the peace and well-being of the State; forbidding the employment of Chinese laborers by corporations or on any public work, and directing by suitable penalties the enforcement of laws to be passed forbidding the introduction of Chinese after the adoption of the Constitution, and providing for the removal of those already in the State.

IN Sacramento City, Cal., on the 11th, the Republicans elected their ticket for municipal officers. A large Republican mass meeting was held in San Francisco, on the evening of the same day, at which the sentiment was indorsed that, while crediting the President with honesty in retiring the Chinese bill, his action did not represent the views of the Republican party in California, and the party declined all responsibility therefor.

DURING an affray in the State Treasurer's office at Atlanta, Ga., on the 11th, between Col. R. A. Alston, member of the Legislature, a prominent politician, and E. D. Cox, one of the largest planters in the State, both parties used pistols with deadly effect, and both were fatally shot.

THE Board of Inquiry (consisting of Gens. Schofield, Terry and Getty) in the Fitz-John Porter case held their final session in New York, on the 12th. Their report would be made up and sent to the President in a few days, and the result of the investigation, so far as the board is concerned, will be known from Washington.

CHARLES H. BELL has been appointed by the Governor Senator from New Hampshire to serve the extra session, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the expiration of the term of Senator Wadleigh. Mr. Bell has accepted.

IMPRESSIVE ceremonies over the remains of the late Bayard Taylor took place in New York, on the afternoon of the 13th, in the presence of a large number of spectators. The body, on its arrival, was taken on board a revenue cutter at Hoboken, and conveyed to Hartley street, from which point the procession started. Many distinguished personages were present.

DR. JOHN M. WOODWORTH, Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital service, died at his residence in Washington, on the 14th, of prostration caused by overwork. Dr. Woodworth was once a Chicago practitioner.

A BILL has been introduced in the lower House of the Illinois Legislature to abolish the practice of "treating."

THE remains of the late Bayard Taylor were buried in Longwood Cemetery, Kennett Square, Pa., on the 15th. The funeral was attended by a large concourse of friends and neighbors, and by Gov. Hoyt and a joint committee of both houses of the Pennsylvania Legislature.

SMITH, NICHOLS & ROGERS, of Providence, R. I., failed, on the 15th, with aggregate liabilities of from $500,000 to $700,000.

MAJ.-GEN. THOMAS W. SHERMAN died at Newport, R. I., on the afternoon of the 16th, four days after the death of his wife. He was a native of Rhode Island, served during the Mexican and late Civil wars, and was put on the retired list some time ago, after having been appointed Brevet Major-General for brave and gallant service.

THE trustees appointed to ascertain the indebtedness of Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, report that he owes an aggregate of $9,377,371.57.

Foreign.

LONDON dispatches of the 10th says say Lord Northcote had authorized the announcement that negotiations were in progress with Yakoob Khan, the new Ameer of Afghanistan.

A LETTER from a high Indian official was published in the London Pall Mall Gazette, in which it was stated that the people of Cashmere were dying off like flies from famine, and that, at the present death rate, the country would be nearly depopulated by the end of the year.

A RESOLUTION favoring local option in license matters was voted down in the British House of Commons, on the 11th—164 to 252.

TWO FATAL cases of Siberian plague are reported at St. Petersburg.

SULINA, at one of the mouths of the Danube, has been proclaimed a free port.

THE anticipated breaking of the banks of the River Theiss, at the City of Szegedin, in Hungary, occurred on the morning of the 13th. The waters swept in broad volume through the center of the city, causing devastation, terror, suffering and death in their wake. The larger buildings were undermined and their inmates borne along to destruction. The smaller structures were lifted bodily and crushed to atoms. Over 30,000 people are reported to be homeless, and it is believed that thousands of lives have been carried to their last. Up to midnight of the 12th, two-thirds of the city was under water, and 100 square miles in the immediate vicinity were also flooded.

ON the 13th, the Duke of Connaught, son of Queen Victoria, was married to Princess Louisa Margaret, daughter of Prince Frederick Charles, of Prussia.

A PARIS dispatch of the 13th says the French Chamber of Deputies had, after an animated debate, rejected that clause in the committee's report recommending the impeachment of the Ministry of the 16th of May, by a vote of 317 to 159.

DAN REDDEN, one of the lately pardoned Fenian prisoners, died at Kingstown, Ireland, on the 13th, from paralysis, induced by the hardships he endured while in prison.

TELEGRAMS were received in London from Sofia, on the 14th, announcing the outbreak of another insurrection in Macedonia, headed by the Bishops of Sosa and Ochrida.

THE French cotton mills in the Department of the Nord have stopped running on account of trade depression.

GEN. KAUFMAN, the Commander of the Russian forces in Central Asia, has resigned in consequence of the failure of his Afghan policy.

ACCORDING to Szegedin dispatches of the 14th, the River Naros was rising rapidly, and New Szegedin was threatened. On the 13th, the Governor of Szegedin issued a proclamation calling upon the American flag over his right shoulder and an immense bouquet in his left hand, he marched around the track twice, a Captain of police on one side and his trainer on the other. The band played "God Save the Queen." The enthusiasm ran high. Rowell then left the track for good with a score of 500 miles. He went at once to the Ashland House, was washed and polished down, and went to bed for four hours, when he is to be waked up. He was received at the hotel by some twenty ladies and congratulated. He seemed to be a pretty well used-up man.

Harriman completed 450 miles and 3 laps at 8:43:40, and then he retired from the track for good. He was surrounded by a host of friends, who brought him out of the garden by the Fourth avenue entrance and placed him in a carriage, and he was driven to the St. James Hotel. He was accompanied by his doctor, various floral gifts given to Rowell and Harriman were taken to their hotels after them. Ennis also ran remained on the track, and he was walking to win a bet of $1,250. He had succeed himself to make 475 miles and was determined to win it. He was cheered lustily, the crowd remaining notwithstanding that it was generally known that both Rowell and Harriman had left the garden. Ennis continued at a good pace and finished his 475th mile at 8:55:25 and completed 475 miles at 10:57. The applause was tremendous, Ennis running his 476th mile in 6 minutes and 55 seconds, the fastest of the contest.

This concluded the great walking match, and the vast crowd slowly dispersed. The official score for the match at ten o'clock, when it closed, was: Rowell, 500 miles and 180 yards; Ennis, 475 miles; Harriman, 450 miles 3 laps and 140 yards. The men were off the track during the whole six days as follows: Rowell, 38 hours 42 minutes and 50 seconds; Ennis, 36 hours 2 minutes and 33 seconds; Harriman, 36 hours 1 minute and 21 seconds. The total receipts during the contest were $61,000. At the beginning of the match it was decided that $1,000 should be set apart out of the receipts for the man or men who failed to cover 450 miles. O'Leary thus will receive $1,000.

At half-past ten the lights in the main building of the garden were turned out, and the great international pedestrian contest for the championship of the world was settled for the present.

The total number of miles made by each man on each day of the match was as follows:

	Rowell.	Ennis.	Harriman.
First day	110	98	109
Second day	87	78	86
Third day	83	73	84
Fourth day	77	68	65
Fifth day	57	58	56
Sixth day	72	70	60
Total	500	475	450

Closing Day of the Great Pedestrian Contest.

NEW YORK, March 16.

The last night of the great pedestrian contest equaled, indeed exceeded, the opening night in point of both numbers and enthusiasm. At seven o'clock fully 7,000 people were present. The pedestrians were encouraged by the most hearty applause. Ladies waved their handkerchiefs, and threw several bouquets at the contestants as they passed along, and men threw their hats in the air, and yelled themselves hoarse. The excitement was something tremendous. Early in the afternoon it was conceded that Rowell would take the belt. Interest was then centered upon Harriman making the 450 miles necessary to secure a share of the gate money. Harriman walked very lame, and appeared to suffer great pain, but he struggled along, gamely and steadily, nearer his goal. Ennis was in fine form during the evening, and made some very quick miles. He was quite fresh, and entirely free from lameness. He made smart after spurt, both running and walking, and the applause that greeted him was immense. About 6:30 this afternoon Rowell, Harriman and Ennis were all on the track together, and Rowell, overtaking Harriman, linked his arm and walked around, talking with him. The cheering was loud, but when Ennis came along and linked with Harriman on the other side, applause burst forth in a deafening roar. They marched around arm in arm, and dozens of bouquets were hurled at them. The judges announced that two laps were taken from the score of each man for having received support while going twice around the track. Ennis completed his 450th mile at 4:23:26, his 460th mile at 5:38:45, and his 465th at 7:32:15. He left the track at 5:39:20 and returned at 6:29:35, and left again at 7:33 for a short rest. Harriman finished his 435th mile at 3:32:40, and his 440th mile at 4:47:55, and his 445th mile at 7:31:22. It then became certain that no would turn his 450 miles and earn his share of the gate money. He left the track at 4:48:30, and after a good rest until 6:14, when he again appeared. He had evidently more friends in the building than any other two. Rowell finished his 481st mile at 4:13:17, and kept on walking and running alternately, finishing his 485th mile at 5:13:44. Remaining on the track, at 7:29:30 he had completed his 494th mile. As Harriman neared his 450th mile, Rowell was closing up to his 500th, the spectators became perfectly wild with excitement, and as Harriman finished his 450th mile, and great white figures on the blackboard announced the result, a storm of applause seldom heard burst forth, and lasted fully ten minutes. He completed his 450 miles at 8:42, and a man had to carry around before him an immense bouquet, presented by his lady friends. He carried a small American flag over his shoulder, and this incident increased, if it were possible, the enthusiasm.

When the figures 500 went up opposite Rowell's name on the blackboard the excitement became enormous to be imagined. This was three minutes to nine o'clock. Then he put on his right of that day, the Ayker protecting Concord cave way, and the town, containing 16,000 inhabitants, was partially inundated. Szentes, with about 20,000 inhabitants, was engaged in a similar struggle with the waters. Over 400 corpses had been recovered in Szegedin, on the present day.

DENNEHY & CO., distillers, of Dublin, failed, on the 14th, for $750,000.

ACCORDING to Vienna dispatches of the 16th, of the 9,700 houses in Szegedin, all except 800 had been destroyed. It was believed that from 2,000 to 6,000 persons had been drowned. The bodies of 400 had already been recovered. Over 10,000 horses and cattle and 90,000 sheep had perished.

A CAPE TOWN dispatch, published on the 16th, says that the Portuguese Artican explorer, Pinto, had escaped Portugal, South Africa, with eight followers, all that remained of the 400 with which he set out on his expedition.

The Lamentable End of a Fox Chase.

Some frivolous people at Allentown, Pa., the other day, undertook to make the noble sport of fox-chasing odious. Trifling by the unfortunate example set of some of the New York sportsmen who turned their foxes loose and were never able to find them again, the Allentown sportsmen led the animal over a trail and then secured him for future use. The hounds were turned out and for some time followed the trail beautifully, but at the very moment when the chase seemed to promise a most successful conclusion the pack became confused and went off in the most unaccountable directions, as if twenty foxes had divided at that point and gone twenty different ways. When this remarkable thing had been investigated it was found that a mischievous fellow, understanding the sublime character of the fox-chase, had dragged an odorous and detestable mackerel over the trail and at the critical point had broken into a whole lot of trills, so that each hound could have one all to himself. The mackerel trail is not a new idea, but its successful introduction on this occasion suggests a new and economical thing for sportsmen. The mackerel is considerably cheaper than the fox, and not by any means as likely to get away when turned loose. Let our gallant sportsmen try a mackerel chase. —Philadelphia Times.

The water used in mixing bread must be tepid hot. If it is too hot the loaf will be full of great holes.

THE SENTINEL.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

WHICH WAY?

Children, stop your play,
And tell me which way
I shall take to reach the city on the hill.
Point the path
With a smile;
Through the weeds, across the stile,
By a brook where wild flowers grow,
Where the birds sing sweet and low.
Then you forget it is so far.
And how tired are you are,
For the calm rests you, makes you still,
If you take this way to the city on the hill.

Then the boy,
With a frown:
"This way;
By the mill and through the town—
You will see the soldiers there,
Hear the drums and pass the fair;
Then you forget the way is long
While you walk in the throng,
For the noise will drown you, make you deaf!
When you go this way to the city on the hill."

LET IT PASS.

Be not swift to take offense;
Let it pass!
Anger is for fools to harness;
Let it pass!
Bread not darkly for a wrong
Which will disappear ere long;
Rather sing some cheery song—
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

Stifle consider the present mind;
Let it pass!
As the sculptor molds his wind,
Let it pass!
Any vulgar souls that live
May condemn without reserve;
The immortals do forgive.
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

Echo not an angry word;
Let it pass!
Think how often you have erred;
Let it pass!
Since our joys must pass away,
Like the dewdrops on the spray,
Wherefore should our sorrows stay?
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

Bid your anger to depart,
Let it pass!
Lay the counsels words to heart,
Let it pass!
Follow not the giddy throng;
Better to be wronged than wrong;
Therefore sing some cheery song—
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

THE SEVERED HAND.

About the end of January, more than twenty years since, Dr. Lisfranc, a celebrated surgeon of Paris, was returning to his house at eleven o'clock at night. He had reached his door, and had raised the knocker, about to give warning to the maid in attendance of his arrival, when a vigorous arm stopped his own half way, and at the same time three masked figures surrounded the astonished doctor. The street was deserted, the doctor had no arms by him, and, although large, that resistance would prove unavailing, he sought to escape from the hands of the bandit by the audacity of his pirate, when the man who held his arm addressed him very politely, saying:

"I believe you are Dr. Lisfranc?"

"You seem to be acquainted with my person," replied the doctor. "Take, then, my purse and watch—trouble me not longer. That get you gone to more honest work."

"Sir," said the man, haughtily, "we are no thieves, but only come to ask from you a favor."

"You have chosen a strange way and an unusual hour for such a purpose," said the doctor, mistrustfully.

"Every hour is good for so clever a surgeon as yourself to perform an operation."

"Eh?" said the doctor, who, a little reassured, stood examining his three clients more closely, and perceived that they were dressed more like gentlemen going to a ball than like highway robbers.

"We request, doctor, that you follow us immediately."

"Permit me at least to warn my lady of my absence."

"No—there is no need for it. You have your implements with you, that will do. You must submit, however, to having your eyes bandaged."

"But, sir——"

"Come, come, by George," said one of the men, "if you have so many words about it, we shall never proceed. He then sounded a shrill whistle, and a carriage coming from a narrow street in the neighborhood made its appearance. The three men led the doctor to it, helped him up, and then got in after him. The horses galloped away at a rapid pace.

Dr. Lisfranc did not even think of offering a resistance, which must prove useless, but submitted with a good grace to the mysterious violence exercised upon his person.

For two hours' time not a word was exchanged between him and his traveling companions, who spoke among themselves in a language not familiar to the doctor.

At length the carriage rolled beneath a portico—the noise of an opening gate was heard, creaking on its hinges—the carriage stopped.

The door was opened and the steps let down.

"Well?" inquired an anxious voice.

"He is here," replied one of the men in the carriage, and, taking the doctor by the hand, assisted him to alight. They then caused him to ascend several steps.

By the cold air that struck upon his face the doctor perceived that he was on the steps of an outer portico. A door was opened, and the doctor fancied they made him cross a large hall; he was then led through a suite of apartments covered with soft carpeting. At last the doctor's guide paused and said:

"We have reached our destination, doctor—remove your bandage."

The doctor, whose terror had changed to an uneasy curiosity and a vague apprehension, obeyed the stranger's voice and found himself in a small room, luxuriously furnished, and but half lit by an alabaster lamp which hung in the middle of the room. The window curtains were closely shut, as well as those of the alcove, which occupied the further end of the apartment. In this room the doctor found himself along with one of the three individuals who had made him an unwilling captive.

The stranger was tall and of imposing mien. He was dressed with a truly aristocratical precision; his black eyes glittered through the half mask that covered his upper features, while a marvious twitch agitated his uncovered lips and the thick beard that surrounded the lower part of his face.

"Doctor," said the stranger, in a dry and broken voice, "prepare your implements—you have to perform an amputation."

"Where is the patient?" inquired Lisfranc; saying which he turned toward the alcove, and moved a step forward. The stranger severely and intentionally stirred him rudely and intentionally. The doctor politely remonstrated; but, instead of answering, the young man struck him repeatedly in the face.

It may be easily conceived what excitement and consternation this scene produced.

The next day was appointed for a meeting, and the company soon after dispersed in confusion.

The young Matilda de —— (the names are too illustrious and too well known for us to point them out, even by initials), the young Matilda de —— was the daughter of one of the most illustrious soldiers of the Empire. Her father had acquired an elevated rank, great glory and a high station in the army; but he was one of the few Generals whom the Emperor had not enriched. Matilda de —— had, therefore, no fortune to bestow upon the one who should call her his.

Napoleon de —— was the grandson of the noble Duchess de ——. The Duchess had a great name, an empty title, but no fortune.

Notwithstanding this, the Duchess and the General, long bound together by the ties of friendship, had mutually agreed to unite the two children in marriage.

Of this determination, however, they soon repented. While Matilda and Napoleon gave themselves up to the sweet charm of their mutual affection, the Duchess and General, almost as much the interest of their children, and a little, also, for their own, played a scene of high comedy.

"If my daughter," says the General, "marries that poor devil, Napoleon, not a luxury, and pleasure."

"If my son," interrupted the Duchess, "should wed a girl and not a fortune, how could we ever restore the luster of the name to him——"

The General, therefore, sought to wean Matilda from her lover, and the Duchess exerted herself to divert Napoleon from thinking of Matilda. But neither could succeed. Napoleon and Matilda loved too sincerely, too devotedly, to fail an easy prey to the snares spread out to trap their youth and inexperience.

Unable to dissuade them, the General and the Duchess insisted upon the departure of Napoleon, and on his shipping himself for a while from Paris. He told him that the advancement of their fortune demanded it. It was indispensable for him to acquire a position in the world. Napoleon had just been offered to provide him with a place as Secretary to some foreign Embassy. He refused to go so he would shut out himself from a brilliant career. He must accomplish this sacrifice, were for Matilda's sake; as her future welfare depended upon it, and he was to become responsible for her happiness, Napoleon at length unwillingly consented.

He saw Matilda for a last time; he told her of his departure. A cry of agony burst from the young girl's bosom. In vain did Napoleon acquaint her with his projects; in vain did he endeavor to comfort her by pointing out, in a future return, a whole life of love, happiness and wealth. Matilda still remained unconsolable. A dark foreboding prevented her from believing the false promises of an uncertain futurity. What could she gain by exchange for happiness which, at present, was theirs, and which they were about to sacrifice to their duty? She felt that her golden dream was over—that it was fading away from her sight.

Napoleon took her hand in his, and covered it with tears and kisses. "Remember," said he, "remember that though sent my betrothed, and that this hand is mine, forever mine."

Saying which he put a ruby ring on her finger.

"It is my mother's," murmured he. Matilda could only answer by pressing the ring to her lips, then fell fainting and desolate upon a couch.

Napoleon departed. His absence facilitated the projects of the parents.

The General and then made an appeal to Matilda's devoted heart; he exaggerated his poverty—he invented a tale about debts and engagements which he would not be able to meet; he pointed out to her the horrors which would surround his miserable old age, beggared and dishonored; he even hinted to her that it would be far better to cut short his troubled life. She alone had power to save him—she must forget Napoleon and wed the Count de ——, whose handsome and manly face, whose noble soul she well must know how to appreciate.

A little selfishness and Matilda would have been saved; but it is the weakness of elevated minds not to shrink from sacrifices. Matilda, in despair, threw herself in her father's arms and promised all. He blessed and thanked her for her devotion.

He was yet speaking when Matilda had left the room, unable longer to control her overcharged feelings. Pale, exhausted with the struggle, she hastened to her apartment, and, rushing on a seat, gave way to a flood of silent but bitter tears.

Flow, flow, cruel tears! Weep, thou noble creature, upon thy dream so bright, so short-lived! Happiness almost was never made for souls like thine!

The banns were published, and on the 10th of January, 18—, in the Church of Thomas d'Aquinns, Matilda was wedded to the Count de ——. The General's face was radiant with satisfaction.

At the moment of the nuptial blessing, when the bridegroom puts on the finger of the bride the ring—symbolic link of the chain that unites them—instead of giving her left hand, as is the custom, Matilda suddenly passed to the Count's right and gave him her right hand. The Count was about to make an observation and take her left hand; but Matilda drew it back and again extended to him her right hand, lowering her eyes, but with that air of firmness and determination which is not to be mistaken. The Count saw it at once, and, fearing a scene, did not insist, but put the ring on the right hand, which Matilda still held out to him.

The Count was of a jealous nature, as jealous as Othello. A fatal suspicion had taken possession of his mind. The ring that Matilda wore on her left hand gave him much uneasiness. He told Matilda that he looked upon it with aversion, and begged her to wear it no longer. Matilda replied that she would never be separated from it, giving her answer with much sweetness, but with the same determined air which she had shown at her wedding.

From that time that which had previously only been a suspicion in the Count's mind became a certainty. He determined upon being revenged, but dissembled his feelings and purposes. A system of surveillance was organized around Matilda. Soon there came a letter from Napoleon. The poor youth, ignorant of Matilda's sacrifice and the ruin of his dearest hopes, spoke of his love, of his future happiness, of their speedy marriage. He reminded Matilda that her hand belonged to him, and he requested her to look often upon the ruby of his mother's ring while thinking of him. He concluded by announcing a happy tiding. He was charged by his Ambassador to be the bearer of important dispatches to Paris. Before a month was over he would again see his beloved Matilda.

The letter was put into the Count's hands. He went through all. He went to Matilda's apartment with the open letter in his hand, and, handing it to her, said, coolly:

"I can imagine your scruples, but why did you not explain yourself sooner? You have sworn that your hand will belong only to him! Very well! as soon as he arrives I shall take it upon myself to make your promise good," with a frightful smile.

Matilda did not even shudder—she seemed to have nothing more to fear upon earth.

In a short time Napoleon returned to Paris; but he was very much altered. Grief and despair had preyed upon his heart, for he had heard of his misfortune.

The day after his arrival a small money box was presented to him, which had been brought by a servant in livery. He opened it. His horror and anguish might more easily be imagined than described. The case contained a bloody hand—the hand of a woman—MATILDA'S HAND! On a paper stained with blood he read these words: "So does the Countess de —— keep her word." Roaring with rage and indignation, he took his pistols and flew to the Count's house.

The Count and Matilda had disappeared during the night, a few hours after the bloody deed, and no one knew whence they had gone.

On the night Napoleon had recognized his mother's ring on the doctor's chain, he had gone to that ball because a secret presentiment had urged him thither.

The next day Dr. Lisfranc and his antagonist met in the wood of Vincennes. The doctor received a severe wound below the arm-pit. He lay long in danger, but hopes were entertained for recovery. Before leaving his adversary, the doctor related to him the incidents of that cruel night on which he had been compelled to commit a crime for the sake of humanity.

"However," added he, "Matilda could not have suffered much; a sublime exaltation sustained her courage, and I am sure she was happy in her suffering, in the thought that her hand, at last, would be returned to you. And when it was over I heard a gentle voice murmuring from behind the curtain that hid her from sight: 'Tell him, beseech you, that my heart will go toward him even as my hand.' Had it not been for the ring, I could not have fulfilled her wish."—Exchange.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

AT an early hour on the morning of the 8th, a son of David Brown, a wealthy butcher, residing in the western part of Detroit, was awakened to find three masked men standing by his bedside with revolvers presented at his head. He was ordered to cover up under pain of being shot. They then demanded his money. He told them that all he possessed was in the pocket of his pants. By this time other members of the family had been aroused and raised the alarm. Two of the marauders started to quiet the others, while the remaining one rifled young Brown's pockets. A daughter of the butcher was chased from her room to the porch, from which she jumped to the ground, seriously injuring herself. The elder Brown and his wife were seized and an attempt made to thrust them into a closet. Brown escaped and fled down-stairs. His wife, however, was locked up. Meantime young Brown grappled with the other burglar and would have overpowered him had not his companions come to his relief. The robbers then fled and escaped. Brown had $1,000 secreted in bed, probably known to the robbers, but they failed to get it, owing to the resistance met with.

The only business that came before the last term of the Ontonagon County Court was the naturalization of two aliens.

THERE is said to be a curious and half-forgotten statute in this State which provides a fine of $500 upon a clergyman from another State officiating at a marriage ceremony in Michigan.

C. D. STEVENS, a Detroit insurance agent, was held for trial on the afternoon of the 10th, with Dr. H. C. Smith, for the purpose of paying $4,000 due the latter's step-daughter from an estate of which he is administrator. On arrival at the bank he claimed to have lost the money on the way from the office. The parties being on bad terms, much feeling was manifested and counter-allegations made. Smith believes the loss to be bogus, and Stevens intimates that Smith abstracted the money himself. Business circles are considerably excited over the affair.

THE farmers in the regions round about Cass, Tuscola County, are organizing for the purpose of resisting any suit that may be brought against them for the alleged infringement of the so-called patent Lee farm gate.

A few evenings ago, at Olive, eight miles north of Holland, Ottawa County, Mr. Sawyer called out Henry Snooks at his boarding place, pretending to wish to speak to him about a girl between both admired. Retiring some eight rods, Sawyer struck Snooks, when the latter whipped him and got him down till he promised to behave himself. Snooks then went back to the house in company with a third person who had witnessed the fight. After they were seated in the house, Sawyer slipped out on tiptoe, drew a revolver and shot Snooks in the left breast over the heart, rendering him senseless. On examination, it proved that the bullet had struck a rib and glanced off; otherwise he would have been killed instantly. Sawyer was arrested and lodged in jail. He remains there still.

We understand last week that John Bell was to erect a building on Bell street. We were in error, we should have said Mason street, one lot west of Dodge street. Mr. Bell will use the present store on his new building as a dwelling and grain warehouse. The upper story will be furnished off as a hall for societies, or for public use. Mr. Bell is already getting materials up on the ground for the building.

Dull Business.—This week the work was commenced on the foundation of the SENTINEL building and we were informed on good authority that within a year after April first, we shall pay a visit to Detroit. Quartet and chaser for the News and Stationery store will soon be out and ready to go up as soon as the room is ready to receive it, and other leading trades, etc., are being made up for the postoffice. Two express men—for the postoffice. Two express men—May 15, will find much to do in our new quarters.

Pine Harbor.—The winter's output is of 89,000, the 47,000 left over from the years operations, and Dale's contract on the superstructure of the piers will make about 211,000 to expend on Charlevoix bar this season. If advantageous we shall have a tug, in addition to extending the piers 200 feet into the lake, and one hundred feet northerly, give the channel a depth of water that can look and profanity defies. It is generally considered that the extension of the inshore piers 200 feet will prevent any current drift between the piers.

Grand Traverse.—To the voters of Charlevoix county—Please bear in mind when you are voting on that bridge tax, that you are voting to pay $1,511.66 instead of $15.00. J. E. HAMMOND.

—Editor Sentinel, please copy.—Petoskey Record.

Yes, we copy with pleasure. The Supervisor from Melrose is wise in making his statement since unpaid loyalty & patriotism. We presume he knows that in case of war he would be a negative vote on the foregoing. He knows that is not true. When the Indian troubles have become ancient history, the county will be out on them and pines put, interests and costs recovered. Did Mr. Dutcher ever hear of a popular vote to negative a loan after the money had been borrowed and expended. One hundred dollars was illegally appropriated several years ago for the improvement of the upper Pine River, a vote to negative that expenditure would be just as sensible as this movement. We shall desperate a negative vote on this tax in case of its moral effect, but its logic therefore will be no more than it is in Grand County in Texas voted that the Charlevoix county single bonds should not be paid.

The crop of oat, in Cheboygan county, is 90,000 bushel, and the spring timber, 41 per cent are now to be cut. Other county, it is 21,000,000 feet.

Under date of the 13th inst., the following item of interest to pigeon men has been received at Petoskey: "The pigeons are nesting at Pentwater, Mich.

Hannah, Lay & Co., of Traverse City, have almost completed their winter's logging, and the crop is 25,000,000 feet, which will be manufactured into lumber at their posts, viz: Traverse City, Fife Lake, and Frankfort.

Major Dewey, of the Twenty Second U. S. Infantry, and commandant at Fort Mackinac, passed through Petoskey Monday, on his way back to that post, having been absent at Binghampton, N. Y., on a 30 days' furlough.

After Zach Chandler's speech at the last session, and after Harmon, Lamar and others had eulogized Jeff. Davis, every Democrat present in the Senate voted to pass that leader of the rebellion, and one of them explained, upon the announcement of the vote, "Thank God, we come within this one vote."

The passage by the House at Lansing of the bill for levying the different authorities on the public approval. The levy of only the high test oil is now regulated by law proportion as other oils test lower, and the proportion decrease of the appraisal is ungentlemanly on the side of reduction.

Lecture by Rev. A. P. Morrison.
From the Petoskey Tribune.

Last Wednesday evening Rev. A. P. Morrison will deliver a lecture at the Town Hall on "The Young Man of To-Day." The possibilities that are before him. Mr. Morrison's well known ability as a lecturer is sufficient guarantee that the lecture will prove an interesting one. He has delivered the lecture at various places, and always with the greatest success. He has numerous flattering notices from the press of the different places where the lecture has been delivered, all going to show that the attendance was large and the addresses appreciative. The following notice is from Corry, Pa. Journal:

He held his audience spell bound for near the space of an hour, delivering one of the most interesting and entertaining lectures that it was ever been our privilege to hear, or, I dare say, that was ever heard in this section of the country. Corry may well be proud of one that stands at the head of the class of lecturers. To say the lecture was a success gives no idea of its appreciation with which it was received, carrying a number of the hearts of the highest praise.

Twenty five cents admission will be charged and we feel sale in assuring all who may attend that they will receive the full value of their money. We bespeak a full house on the occasion and would urge our citizens to attend.

Suicide and Fatal Accident.—A terrible accident occured on the afternoon of the 14th, near Northport, by which Mrs. Henry Bayon lost her life. It seems that Mrs. Taylor was living alone with her child about a year old, her husband being in the lumber woods this winter. Mr. F. P. Taylor, her father-in-law, happening to pass by the house at dusk heard the child crying very hard. On entering the house the mother could not be found, nor no trace of her, except a water pail standing by the well, which is over 30 feet deep. Being unable to procure the pump in the well, and fearing the worst, the neighbors were soon assured, and her dead body discovered in the well, from where it was soon taken. The head was badly crushed by striking the casts at the bottom. It is thought that death was instant, and that the accident happened some hours previously, while she was endeavoring to draw water from the well with a hop and pail. She was a sister of F. Hamberger. Her burial was last Sunday.—Leelanau Tribune

SCHOOLMASTER Loose.—We find the following exceedingly sad case (?) deserving of a poor several state in one of our exchanges:

In looking over the assessment roll of Union township we few days since ran across the following local description of a piece of property "Middle 40 of east ½ of west ½, except east ½ of north ½ of same, section 26." Also the following: "Northeast ¼ of east ½." What puzzles us is to know the exact number of acres in each of the above descriptions. It is needless to add that the Supervisor of that township is a Granger.

Fashionable Colors—New Styles in Trimmings—Buttons.

Colors spin new and strange air-ian Cannapie, or cannibal, a succession of copper shades, the name being given from the resemblance to the copper complexion of a tribe of cannibals. Blue is largely brought forward, and appears in many different shades, but, with the exception of the dark marine blues or the pastel tints, mixtures of green are often more or less apparent. The most pronounced blue of the season is called sapphire, and this, but for an overcasting of green, would be a revival of that positive blue which for a long time has been consigned to oblivion. Gendarme is a dark shade of military blue, and other blues of milder type are Japanais and bleu de Sevres. Baiser blue is almost gray, and the clear pale blues are too attractive to be relinquished. Yellow finds good representation in the new spring colors, but the shade most in favor is old gold. Pale yellows are by no means ignored, and in new flowers excellent results are produced by shadings from pale yellow into reddish tints. The beige shades also appear frequently. Garnet and wine shades have also taken a new lease of life, and are brought forward everywhere and in all shades, from ashes of rose deep as to run almost into black up to others resembling the pale red of lighter wines. Prune (peony) is a combination of garnet and plum color. Vieux rouge is a new bright red. Dark plum is not strongly employed, yet serves as a fashionable color. The lighter shades of prune are not much seen. This piece seems to have been usurped by the wine colors, but it is the plum (peacock) colors of the day, that the greatest mixtures and changeable hues appear.

Prominent in the list of choice trimmings are the finely-beaded passementeries, which reproduce some of the designs already familiar, while the more expensive grades represent leaf patterns of various forms, with perfect-ly-executed tulips or Egyptian objects, ing from the center of the leaf. Some of the passementeries are relieved and brightened by a delicate tracery of gold or silver threads, interspersed so as to form arabesque or Grecian designs throughout the pattern. The effect is rich, but by no means gaudy, and the styles and prices are such as to render these goods rather exclusive, for a time at least. These cost from $5 to $12 per yard. Painted beads for dresses are seen of exquisite design and artistic beauty. These are painted by hand on velvet, satin and silk. Flowers in all their richest tints, birds of brilliant plumage, jewels, shells and musical instruments are painted with skill and fidelity to nature on these beautiful and artistic trimmings. Fringes have by no means lost their prestige, and may be had in as great diversity of design as there is a diversity of taste. The average depth of fringe is from four to six inches, including the heading. An entirely new fringe is formed of a hand-crocheted heading background of twist, front of crimped tape and bands of narrow passementerie, interspersed with strands of crocheted silk, the ends of the passementerie bands finished with a tiny satin or crocheted tassel. This elaborate fringe may be had at $8 per yard. Many plain silk fringes are still sewed underneath the edge of the goods, and so heading is entirely avoided. Wooden fringes are no longer considered fashionable, although very neat patterns are still sparingly used on all wool garments where there are no ends of drapery to be trimmed. Plain hems and rows of machine stitching are the most stylish finish on all other parts of all wool costumes. Fancy ribbons are largely used for loops, and in some designs form a complete cascade down the front of a dress. These vary in width from a half-inch to ten inches and a half, and are in all colors and shades of satin, with lizards, flowers, fern leaves and other devices composed of gilt and silver bullion, and fine silk floss woven into the ribbon. The prices range from twenty-five cents per yard up.

For trimming evening dresses, crystal, pearl and white satin beaded and bugle laces are showy and effective, and cost from $2 per yard up. Spanish blond is a kind of lace usually employed, and the beads follow the pattern of the lace, either covering it entirely or only defining the outline. Embroidered silk muslin is much used for the garniture of dress toilets, and comes in new and choice designs. Price, $2 to $25 per yard. "Self" trimmings follow upholstering designs, and are often put on without stitching, but cut out either in round, square or pointed designs on the lower side, and faced or bound with a contrasting color or finished with a fringe. Tassels in upholstering effects are then placed to fall in the opening made by the cutting out. Felts, a striped material of satin and silk or satin and velvet, is much used for trimming, and is cut out so that the stripes are either horizontal or perpendicular rather than bias, this being used as a garniture for the bottom of the skirt, for collars, cuffs, vest or any accessory trimming desired.

Olive and barrel-shaped hand-crocheted buttons, either all silk or combined with jet, will be much used on garments trimmed with passementerie. Wood buttons, hand-painted in gold and colors, are very choice, light and effective, and cost from thirty-five cents per dozen up. French horn, both in the natural color and dyed, are inlaid with gold and pearl in raised designs, representing stars, flowers, birds, beasts, reptiles, fishes and fowls. Crystal glass buttons, sometimes called "Rhine pebbles," are introduced. These are cut in facets and set in platina, and have a most brilliant effect in night; the prices vary from twenty-five cents per dozen up. Medium sizes only, in any kind of button, are fashionable, and the quantity used is totally dependent upon the style of the garment, some requiring only what will fasten the vest, and others a sufficient number to outline the cuffs, pockets, etc.—*N. A Wretch of a Husband.

The other evening a resident of Dearborn avenue (whose name, out of respect to himself, is omitted) took a friend home to dinner, having filed due notice of his intention with his wife, who, in consequence, had, as it were, spread herself. Woman like, however, she insisted on disparaging everything that was brought to table in the inverse ratio of the square of its excellence. "I'm so sorry," she said with ill-concealed triumph, "that this macaroni and cheese should be so wretchedly cooked." "So wretchedly cooked?" echoed the visitor, with genuine surprise; "why, I do not remember where I ever tasted anything one-half so delicious." "It's very slightly burned, and there is not quite cheese enough in it," she said, sadly; "but if you had only been here last Sunday—don't you think so, Robert? You remember that which we had last Sunday, don't you?" she said, appealing to her husband. Instead of saying that he did, and that it was unto be that on the table as a National peculiarity. The lines of social demarcation are nowhere more emphatically indicated than in our own country. They do not, indeed, prevent inter-marriages, nor are they attended by the absurdities of etiquette which the Hindoo or Brahmin faith might impose, but they somehow, by a stern law of artificial life, class from class in a manner which is unknown elsewhere in modern Europe. They are drawn through all grades of society down, from the most elevated coterie down to the humble of-shoot domestic life. A French bonne is much more a servant in her dress, and far more humble in her notions than an English nursemaid. Yet an English nursemaid would not presume to address her mistress in the familiar language which the French bonne would use toward madame. She could not be trusted with the license; not, because knows, because the English character has less confidence in its composition than the French, but because she would at once forget her station. A German gentleman sees nothing outre dig. in shaking hands with his tailor, but an Englishman knows that if he were to admit his tradesmen to the same privilege, they would soon presume upon value it, and then presume upon it. It is a painful fact, that if you wish to command civility and attention it an ordinary London shop where you are not in the habit of dealing, it is necessary to assume an air of calm superiority to the gentleman across the counter. If you approach him with a humble manner, he will regard you with an eye of suspicion. But, if you are polite to him, he will often treat you with absolute contempt. These are only some familiar illustrations out of many which might be selected to show that this superiority or precedence of class over class is not only assumed downward, but looked for upward in England. It is to be feared that the romantic notions of British free-born citizens of the Roman peasantry and Venetian gondoliers might find realization in a sort of bondage from which they would gladly escape. What are commonly known as the "lower orders" here have much more political but far less social liberty than they enjoy under the rule of some foreign States. The origin of this state of things with us, may in a great measure, be attributed to the gross ignorance which has so long characterized our English poor. The mental condition of a London laborer or small tradesman was not many years ago, perhaps in some instances still is, far inferior to the average capacity of similar classes on the Continent. In Germany, where education has long been compulsory and undertaken by the State, the humblest serf can say as better informed on most subjects than those who would be in the position of his employers here. It would, therefore, be most unreasonable to allow familiarity from those who have never learned the dangers of its abuse.

Extraordinary Celebration at Pompeii.

A celebration of a unique character is to take place in Pompeii in November, next year. Mr. J. C. Fletcher has just received from Naples information that the close of the eighteenth century of Pompeii's destruction (and preservation) is to be celebrated with great circumstance by the literary, scientific and artistic societies of all Italy in the forum of what Sir Walter Scott so appropriately termed the "City of the Dead." This extraordinary centennial will be in November, and this will surprise most persons who always read in the accounts of the destruction of Pompeii, Herculaneum and Stabiæ, that it took place in the first year of the reign of Titus (79 A. D.) on the 24th of August. Mr. Fletcher informs us that the translation of the letter of Pliny the Younger to Tacitus, giving the account of that first recorded eruption of Mount Vesuvius, and which letter is usually known to us through Melmoth's translation, is from a manuscript that contains the Roman equivalent for the 24th of August; but other manuscripts of Pliny's letter have been found which place the date three months later—to wit, the 24th of November. Signor Fiorelli, the most learned archeologist on Pompeii, in his Giornale delle Scavi di Pompeii, was the first to call wide attention to the proper date (November). Beside, Dion Cassius, one of the earliest writers after the second century, who wrote on the destruction of Herculaneum and Pompeii by Vesuvius, says distinctly it took place in "the autumn." Mr. Fletcher says that he made a special study of fruits and nuts preserved by the ashes, which came down in a mud paste after the pumice-stone, at Pompeii, and he observed in almost every case that they were nuts and fruits (as chestnuts, etc.) which cannot be preserved from year to year, and which are not in season until after the middle of September.

The day in November next is to be celebrated by excavations of houses, by addresses, and by a banquet in the daytime, and at night by an illumination of the old Greco-Roman city, whose fate was sealed eighteen hundred years ago.—Cincinnati Commercial.

A Question of Dowagers.

Some lawyers take very practical views of cases in which they are retained. In a certain town in Missouri Squire G—— was defending a charge of malpractice. A colored man was suing for damages, his wife having died shortly after an operation for the removal of cancer. When it came Squire G—— 's turn to cross examine the plaintiff, he asked: "Mr. Wilson, how old was your wife when she died?"

"About forty-five, sir."

"Been in feeble health a long time, had she not, Mr. Wilson, and cost you a great deal for medicine and help?"

"Yes, sir."

"You have married again, have you not?"

"Yes, sir."

"How old is your present wife?"

Mr. Wilson drew himself up with dignity. "I'm sorry," she said with ill-concealed triumph, "that this macaroni and cheese should be so wretchedly cooked." "So wretchedly cooked?" echoed the visitor, with genuine surprise; "why, I do not remember where I ever tasted anything one-half so delicious." What Our Presidents Cost.

A correspondent sends to the Boston Herald the following curious calculation: "I have been calculating the difference between the expense of supporting a President of the United States at the salaries they have received since the first inauguration of Washington with the sum of $10,000 per year to each President during his life, the same to commence upon his inauguration day, hereceiving no other pay for his services. The result is as follows: Salaries from 1789 to 1870, at $25,000 per year, $2,100,000; from 1870 to 1879 at $50,000 per year, $500,000; total, $2,600,000. The combined lives of all the Presidents to this date, dating from their first inauguration, amount to 280 years, and at $10,000 per year it amounts to $2,800,000. There being so little difference in the sums total, while for most of the time the salary has been but half what it now is, would it not be better for the country, financially and morally, and for the Presidents also, if they each received $10,000 per year during their lives, dating from their inauguration? The present expense to the Government would be $20,000 per year instead of $50,000; and it is not probable that we should have, on an average, more than two ex-Presidents living at one time, and four would not increase the present expense. The object of the large salary was clearly for the purpose of giving the outgoing President a respectable competence to retire upon, and not be driven to mental labor for his support. Would not the above plan be an improvement?"

A Celebration at Pompeii.

We think very likely we have written something about old maids before this, for every scribbler has had pig flling at them, and every newspaper editor has published jokes about them, and every would-be witty man has sneeringly spoken of some one of the fraternity as "only an old maid."

Why not say only an old married woman? Certainly, it is not for any lack respectability, though many people would convey that impression by their contempt of single women.

"Don't invite her—she's an old maid!" How many times we have heard this from young lips, when some pleasure party or picnic was on the tapis. As if an old maid could not enjoy sailing on the river, or riding over the clover-blown hills, or eating cold-cornered beef and pickles and ginger-bread off from a picnic table. Where the free zephyrs can set at will, and the spiders and grandfather longlegs roam ditto. As if an old maid had not eyes and ears and nose and mouth like other people. As if, because she had never taken a man to look after, she were removed from the pale of society, and condemned to stay at home and knit stockings for the heathen. For we believe that people generally believe this an old maid's sole occupation is knitting foot coverings for the amiable community referred to.

But, we have observed, that when anybody is sick and a nurse is needed, then the old-maid aunt or sister is sent for post-haste, nobody thinks of appealing to her attendance because she is only an old maid. Oh, no, not at all. They are quite willing she shall bathe throbbing foreheads, and comb out snarly hair on fractious heads, and stir up mustard-plasters, and chafe her hand with strong-smelling baths and liniments, and no questions asked.

They don't laugh at her then because she has got pet dogs and cats, they don't make fun of her "cockrow curls," or ask her about the beaus she had in her younger days.

Certainly not! If they want anything of her, they can treat her with just as much respect as if she were not an old maid.

We have repeatedly heard neat, tidy people called old maidish. If a young girl kept her bureau in order, and kept her shoes and stockings mated up, we have heard her called old maidish. If to be neat and orderly is to be old maidish, then would to Heaven all creation were old maidish. It would be better for some people we could mention.

We suppose a woman has a right to remain unmarried if she wants to, and it is a well-established fact that every woman has chances to marry. But if there be a woman who does not want to assume the responsibility of three infants a day, and shirt-buttons to fix, and pantaloons to mend, and coats and handkerchiefs and stockings to keep in order, and old boots, and pipes, and dirty collars, and blacking-boxes, and black bottles, and shaving machinery to pick up continually, together with the general and particular superintendence of half a score, more or less, of the poor man's blessings, do, for pity's sake, give the sensible soul the privilege of doing as she chooses, without ostracizing her, and tearing her character all to pieces because she does her hair up in a pug or otherwise. Give her an equal chance in the world with her married sisters, and if she sleeps with three cats and two poodles every night, whose business is it?—Kate Thorn, in N. Y. Weekly.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—Mr. G. A. Sala, writing in the Illustrated London News of the "higher education of women," holds that if clever girls were "taught to paint on porcelain, to model in clay and wax, to turn, to carve, and especially to draw on wood, they would be a hundred times better employed and fifty times nearer the possibility of earning from three to ten pounds sterling a week than in 'spanking the piano.'"

—Mr. Muller, of the Bristol Orphanages, says, in his thirty-ninth annual report: "Since founding the institution we have received, simply through prayer and the exercise of faith, more than $3,920,000. Sixty-six thousand six hundred children or grown-up persons have been brought up in the various schools, entirely supported by the funds of the institution. Ten thousand two hundred children now attend the schools."

—Corporal punishment is still permitted in the public schools of Boston, subject to the rule that it shall always consist of blows on the hand with a rattan. Superintendent Eliot advocates further restriction, so that whipping shall never be inflicted before the teacher is in a passion. "There should be," he says, "an interval between the offense and the punishment at least as long as that between two sessions." But imagine the torturing suspense in which the pupil would be placed.

—Mr. Spurgeon regards his Pastors' College as his favorite work. It began with one pupil, and now numbers nearly a hundred. The first requirement for admission is that a man shall have preached two years; no special standard of literary excellence or social position is enforced. Mr. Spurgeon says the policy has been to "imitate the florist by planting a large number of slips in the hope that some of them would strike." From an article in the London News it appears that the total income of the college last year reached nearly $35,000.—N. Y. Post.

—The Rt. Rev. Bishop Gilmour, Catholic prelate of Cleveland, has issued a pastoral letter to the clergy of his Diocese, in which he condemns labor-unions for their secrecy; forbids Catholic parents, under threats of excommunication, sending their children to public schools where Catholic parochial schools are easy of access; and gives the Hibernians severe reprimand for not allowing priests to act as their spiritual advisers, and for not allowing them at all their meetings. The bishop urges upon Catholics the necessity of subscribing to the diocesan Catholic journal in preference to all others, and repeats his order to young Catholics not to marry outside of their religious faith. The latter condition is of such unimportant suggestions as to funerals, etc.

—The following resolution was offered at a recent meeting of the London Presbytery: "That the Presbytery instruct deacons and managers having recourse to bazars absolutely to prohibit lotteries and kindred games of chance." Dr. Donald Fraser, one of the members, regarded this as an arrow from Apollyon. "It has gone abroad," he said, "that the Presbytery were a dictatorial body, who rapped people's knuckles at every opportunity; and if I should issue such an ukase as the motion contained, it would bring upon them a lot of nonecessary odium." The decrease against dancing in the United States had caused infinite trouble in church courts. After a long discussion the motion was withdrawn, and an amendment carried by eleven votes to eight, urging ministers and sessions to discourage bazar lotteries.

A Sure Remedy.

A King of Prussia found a remedy for the prima donna malady. The Queen of Queens House in Berlin, and wanted to hear the opera. He was in so mood to be disappointed. The reigning prima donna had a habit of getting hoarse three times on a song hoarse when anything ruffled her temper. On a night when His Majesty was in the royal box, the "intendant of the management" announced that the diva had a sore throat and could not sing. The audience were about to scatter, when the King arose and commanded them to remain. They kept their seats. Behind the scenes an officer and four dragoons entered the lady's room. The officer said: "The King inquires after your health." "The King is very good; I have a sore throat." "His Majesty knows it, and has charged me to take you at once to the Military Hospital to be cured." She soon found herself in a coach with the four dragoons. "I am a little better now; I will try to sing." "Back to the theater," said the officer to the coachman. "But I shall not be able to sing my best." "I think you will." "And pray why?" "Because we have orders to remain behind the scenes and carry you off to the Military Hospital at the least failure." The lady never sang better in her life, and was effectually cured of hoarseness while she remained in Berlin. But we have no King or convenient military hospital to cure our sick birds.—Missouri Republican.

—The total crop of ice gathered from the Hudson River, the past winter is estimated at 3,000,000 tons, taking no account of what is stacked outside the houses.

—Negro squatters are encroaching upon the levee and river front at New Orleans with their cabins, much to the disgust of property-owners.

DOMESTIC AND CULINARY.

—Yelk of eggs is as nourishing as white, though a little heavier.

—In making an Irish stew the suet should be chopped finely and the dough kneaded as lightly as possible. The less it is kneaded the lighter the crust will be.

—Excellent Doughnuts.—One cup of molasses, one cup of sour milk or buttermilk, two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter or cream, and one scant teaspoonful of soda.

—Fish and other dishes often come upon the table very greasy. The way to prevent this is to place brown or white paper over them, letting it touch the greasy surface. Paper absorbs fat.

—Of any one who keeps shoemakers' supplies, you can get for fifteen cents a whetstone, which is coarse and soft, and which will put on a knife with a few strokes an edge that excels everything but the grindstone. Those who have used this convenience, could never keep house again without one. But take care never to get it wet or greasy.

—In frying anything the fat should never be allowed to boil. The proper heat for frying may be known by observation. When it reaches 375 degrees of heat a faint blue smoke rises which tells that it is ready for use. If, however, it begins to smoke before the thing to be fried are ready to go in it its tendency to boil may be checked by throwing in a few pieces of raw potato or bread, which gives it something to work on.

—There is a very stupid prejudice about the use of soft-crown flour in America. If the records of the French cuisine be looked at, it will be found that puddings cooked with soft-crown flour is a favorite dish. The introduction of German dishes coming into France from their former possession, Strasbourg, is quite responsible. Others, dumplings, made of flour and suet, about half the size of an apple-dumpling, are excellent when cooked with sour-krout. As an anti-scorbutic, as a vegetable preparation easily digested, this preparation of cabbage is among the very best.—N. Y. Times.

—Potato Croquet.—One pound mashed potatoes, one egg, one tablespoonful of milk, a little pepper and salt, a few spoonfuls of bread crumbs and cracker dust. Potatoes must be roasted when thoroughly dry. When mashed throw in a small quantity of salt, a tablespoonful of milk, a little pepper and the yelk of an egg. Stir the yelk well into the potato before adding till thoroughly dry. Flour the board well; take a little of the mashed potato and roll lightly in the form of pears. Then into any shape. When the oven is well formed, beat well up the white of one egg, roll the croquet in it, throw over all a little bread-crumb or cracker-dust.

—Fillets of Beef and Dutch Sauce.—One and a quarter pound fillet of beef sliced about one inch thick, greased slightly a tin broiler, place the beef on it and place the broiler under the flame, allowing the beef to broil for about seven minutes, turning it once. For Dutch sauce take half a tablespoonful of cream, half a tablespoonful of flour, the yelks of two eggs, a little pepper and salt, an ounce of butter, and the juice of half a lemon. Put the flour with a small saucepan, and with it the yelks of eggs. After mixing add the lemon juice, cream, butter, pepper and salt; place it over a very hot fire till it thickens, but don't allow it to boil. Having taken the fillets of beef from the broiler, after broiling several minutes, place them in a dish and pour the Dutch sauce around it ready for use.

—Amber Pudding.—Two pounds of raw apples, three ounces of sugar, one gill of cold water, a teaspoonful of lemon juice, yelks and whites of four eggs, six ounces of flour, two ounces of butter, half teaspoonful of yeast powder, a pinch of salt; first put two ounces of the sugar in a small saucepan, with half a gill of water; place in the apples, pared and cored; squeeze over them the lemon juice; put the flour in a basin with two ounces of butter; rub the butter carefully in the flour; then add the yeast-powder, salt and remaining half gill of water; place the ingredients on a board and knead lightly together; roll the dough a third of an inch in thickness; wet the edges of a pie-dish with cold water, and line the edges with some of the dough; wet the dough with water or milk; the dough on the board roll thin, and with a small cutter cut rounds out of the dough and place them on the edge of the pie-dish, upon the dough already covering the edge. When the apples, which have been put in the saucepan with the sugar, water and lemon juice, have become soft, rub them through a wire sieve; then drop into the sauce, one at a time, the yelks of four eggs; mix the eggs and the apples together without loosening the yelks, and pour them into the pie-dish, in the hollow formed by the dough cakes; place the dish in the oven for ten minutes.

Green Peas for the Garden.

This is one of the vegetables which market gardeners sow early in the spring. We have for several years urged upon farmers the advantage of having a considerable quantity of peas for family use. They precede green corn, and certainly of the early vegetables there is none so delightful as the green pea. Children, who are sometimes averse to green vegetable food, seldom refuse tender green peas, especially when they are cooked "thin," or in plenty of juice, with just a dash of sugar. There are varieties in plenty which are so sweet of themselves that sugar is superfluous; but children have a "sweet tooth," and sometimes the elders can stand a little extra sweetening. Many of us remember that in our childhood days the strong, nutritious and sometimes bitter marrowfat peas was cooked "to death," cooked until it was a sort of mush or mush. Our housewives are learning that nothing is lost in nutriment, while much is gained in deliciousness by cooking peas, as the children say, "thin." Indeed, one of the most delightful, though perhaps for hard-workers not very substantial or "filling" of soups is one made from green peas. The finest varieties are the wrinkled sorts. Epicures seldom nowadays fancy the plump, solid varieties, like the marrowfats, which, we confess, are very productive and salable. It is best to plant early, for the early plantings produce the greatest results. The soil is hardy. The soil should be warm and light, and the authorities agree that if the ground has been manured the year previous results are best. Indeed, we cannot too strongly recommend fall manuring. Nevertheless, we have seen a good result from a clover sod, spring plowed, with the addition of barnyard manure and superphosphate. A good dressing of guano in the spring is that the pease run too much to straw. A clemson sod we last year found to be experience was that pease got their best flavor from soil which contained no animal manure; yet we tried phosphates and had the most delicious peas we ever tasted. The ground was, however, finely worked, while another plot, badly worked and badly hoed, produced nothing but weak blossoms. On the successful plot we planted peas which had been started in stratas in old boxes. In boxes of strong loam, with just a little artificial fertilizer, we put two inches of soil to a fair sprinkling of peas, moistening each layer, and then put the boxes near the stoves, occasionally sprinkling with tepid water. In two or three days the pease had sprouted a quarter of an inch. The soil in the garden was ready, and the boxes taken outside were given a shake against the ground, the pease were loosened with their soil, and by a sort of gentle screening between the fingers, so as not to break the sprouts, the pease were regularly planted in the rows and extended by covering with slightly pulverized with the flat of the hoe. They were above ground in thirty-six hours, and produced a fine crop. Market gardeners usually soak their seed for five or six hours before planting in dry weather, and this is right if the soils are watered. Old celery land is good for pease. Farmers recommends that it is best to plant pease as soon as the ground is thawed out enough to work, and to plant two or four inches. He also recommends artificial manure at the rate of a tablespoonful of superphosphate to the foot in the drill. Two, in our opinion, are abundant. The drills should be from two to two and a half inches deep, and two or three feet apart. For the tall varieties we find brush useful, with double rows, so that the brush can be placed between them. These double rows should be six to eight inches apart. And do not forget that pease need hoeing. The bushing should be done when they have grown to be about five inches high. As soon as the pease are ripe the straw should be pulled, as it exhausts the soil. It is a mistake to put off the planting of late pease. If planted with the early ones they will ripen later any way; but they may be planted late for succession.—N. Y. Herald.

Silent Forces.

Workmen in the stone-quarries sometimes find a very hard kind of rock. They pick little grooves for the iron wedges, and then, with great sledge-hammers, drive the wedges into the flinty rock. And yet, once in a while, they fail to divide the solid mass. The iron wedges and the sledges prove useless, and the workmen wonder at this stubborn rock.

But there is yet another way. The iron wedges are removed from the narrow grooves. Then little wooden wedges, of a size thereto fitted, are selected. Now you begin to shake your heads and think, "Well, if iron wedges will not do it, how is it possible for wooden wedges to be used successfully?" Just wait, until we explain. The sharp, well-made wooden wedges are put into place. They are then put in the grooves tightly while wet, and water is kept in the grooves, and the sledge is needed to drive them. They would break under the severe blows of the ponderous hammer. But the workmen just leave the wet wedges alone. They will do what the driven iron failed to do. How so? The damp wood swells. The particles must have room to enlarge. And the granite heart of the rock cannot withstand this silent influence. In a little while the solid rock parts from top to bottom, and the workmen's work is accomplished.

It is so, often, in other things. What noise and visible effort fail to do, some quiet power, when applied, will surely achieve. Teachers may remember this fact in mechanics, and manage some very stubborn natures by the application of silent forces. The iron and the sledge-hammers often fail. But tears, prayer and a patient example never fail.—Alexander Clark.

An Indian Funeral.

"Ned," a Digger Indian, was found dead alongside the railroad track near Auburn, last Wednesday, having apparently fallen from the platform of a car and fractured his skull. His friends being notified, they placed the remains upon a horse and conveyed them to Clipper Gap, where they were duly cremated in the manner customary with the red men of that section. The funeral pile, which is built of wood to the height of about four feet, is kept burning about five hours, during which time relatives and friends place upon it such articles as they desire to contribute to aid the deceased when he shall have arrived at the happy hunting grounds—one gives a blanket, another a bow and arrow, another a saddle, etc. When the flesh has all been consumed and only the bones remain, these are raked together and a fire kept burning about them until they also become ashes. When the fire finally dies out the ashes are all collected, taken to the burial ground and interred, a little sugar and sleeped mound being erected over them. The female relatives of the deceased, as evidence of mourning, smear their faces and heads with tar—in the absence of the aristocratic indicating the closeness of their relationship—and this is left until it naturally wears off. There was a large attendance at "Ned's" funeral, every train arriving at the Gap bringing a number of bucks and squaws. As they were allowed to fill the fire, the train men agreed to press the bucks into service when it is necessary to wood up, but on such an occasion as this they sturdily refuse, replying, "No work; funeral to-day."—*Sacramento (Cal.) A DETROIT citizen will begin March 1 the attempt to walk from his house to his office, a distance of six squares, four times per day for one month—a feat never before attempted by any human being in the West. He has already gone into the limits of a trainer, and even in three days he has made such progress that he can stand a fifty-pound sack of flour on end without losing his red in the face. His friends are confident that he will succeed in this great undertaking, and are willing to loose his money at 12-per-cent. interest. If the feat is successfully finished, the citizen will be on exhibition in front of the City Hall for three days—admission 25 cents—and will agree to make no approach nearer than ten feet.—Detroit Free Press.

EDITOR SENTINEL

Why Saint Patrick, who, as so prominent and pious a saint, ought at least to have the gift of prophecy, should have selected such a day as the 17th of March for his own particular anniversary, is a puzzle. It is always wet and miserable. It looks as though the weather fairies were attempting to accomplish 1,000 storms in 1,000 consecutive 17ths of March. The oldest inhabitant can't name a recurrence of this anniversary when the weather was not to some extent bad, both over head and under foot. And yet the invariable programme continues to be carried out. Paddy puts on a shocking bad hat and parasitus, and Bridy stands on the sidewalk and applauds, both more or less heavily draped with green and sport, and, toward night especially, more or less heavily charged with the national beverage. It is a great and a glorious day, and was duly observed in the metropolis last week, the traditional services, processing and whiskey being all present.

Apart from the occurrence of St. Patrick's Day, the calendar week just has celebrated itself in various small ways, a few of which I will notice briefly. In the first place the three successful walkers in the late match at Gilmore's, have had their final business meeting, audited their accounts, received their respective checks, been mildly feted, and at last dispersed, leaving Gotham only partially convalescent from her pedestrian lunacy. I thought that when this ing match was over, the population would calm down and resume their senses; but that result has not yet arrived.

Not only are every available public hall and inclosure in town still filled with pedestrians bent on fame, cash or money, but three fourths of the people one meets in the street plainly show the symptoms of the general mania. When walking abroad and watching the passing throng I have even found myself more uneasily affected by the pedestrian atmosphere, and caught myself wondering whether my gait was the regulation "toe and heel," whether my elbows had just the proper "play," and if my "knee action" was exactly what it ought to be. It's awful, but we cant comfort ourselves with the old Tartar's motto, that "This too shall finally pass away."

Some of those who govern us are having a jam subly breezy time of it just now. After a hard fight on the part of our Tammany County Clerk to keep his pensioners and his place at the same time he has had his official head taken off by Governor Robinson with such a clean and sudden stroke that he was out on the street and his successor in his place before he had any opportunity to make the forcible resistance to his ejectment which he had threatened. There was raving in Tammany for a little while, with threats of suits and arrest and troubles of all sorts; but the raging Sachems have finally settled down into a sullen quiet. In the City Hall also there is war. Mayor Cooper being fully aware of the disgraceful demoralizing which has of late come to be the distinguishing characteristic of the New York Police department and all its subordinate bureaus, has written to each of our three Police Commissioners a brief but pithy letter, charging them with both inefficiency and malfeasance, in terms which must have made their ears tingle, and ending with a request for them to come before him and show cause why they should not be removed. The same official has barring been similarly summoned during the incumbency of Mr. Cooper's predecessor, engaged sharp lawyers to conduct their case, which the latter did with so much cunning, that not only was Mayor Ely unable to remove the city worthies, but the city was forced to pay their lawyers' bills.

Naturally enough the Commissioners were so well pleased with that experience that they wanted to repeat it in the present instance; and so when they came before the Mayor in response to his citation, each one was attended by a retinue of "counsel learned." But Mr. Cooper was not to be caught in the same way and positively declining to transcend the limits of the law directed all his questions to the accused personally. The latter refused to answer except through counsel and a high old time ensued. The lawyers got up to talk and the Mayor ordered them to stop, to which order no attention was paid. Then the Mayor got excited and sent for an officer whom he directed to stop the attorney's harangue, but when the blue coat approached with the apparent purpose of taking away the paper from which the latter was reading, it was handed over to another lawyer who took up the thread of the discourse. Then the Mayor got furious and ordered them put out of his office, but the poor policemen, who didn't know whether the Commissioners or the Mayor would come out ahead and was particularly desirous of keeping his own head butter-side up in any case, hesitated between the two fires and did nothing. Shortly after the session ended without anything very definite having been accomplished, and now the city breathlessly awaits further developments.

Meanwhile the commissioners, per humanity way of compensation for being prosecuted by the Mayor, have taken up and vigorously urged the case of police captain Williams, one of the most corrupt and brutal of their many corrupt and brutal subordinates, a man whose proper place would be in the State Prison, and whose dismissal from the force would be a wholesome warning to the rest of his sort who insult and club everybody who gets in their way—except criminals.

The most grateful occurrence of the whole week was the publication of the Surrogate's decision ending the great Vanderbilt will case. The evidence upon which it was sought to break the will was of the flimsiest character; it convinced nobody but the contestants and their lawyers, even if it convinced them. It consisted of the most random and the most disgusting insinuations and assertions ever tolerated by a judicial tribunal. The reason why the case of the contestants so suddenly and utterly broke down was the introduction of several wills of the Commodore, executed when he was in the fullness of his strength and the best use of his faculties, making precisely the same discriminations and against precisely the same heirs as his last will and testament, which has been the subject of the protracted contest. Those previous wills made when his mind was at its best, prove most conclusively that the final distribution of his property by his last will was in pursuance of a deliberate and long settled purpose formed many years in advance of that feebleness of his health and of his mind, which swaggered as the ground for setting aside the will presented to the Surrogate. There was never a more disgraceful collapse of an utterly scandalous case.

Something which the cynical reader might interpret as an attempt by the Long Branch hotel men to get a little gratuitous advance advertising for that once favorite resort appears in the press pretty regularly at this time of year. It comes in the shape of sensational reports of incendiarism, and an alleged conspiracy to destroy the whole town. We have just been favored with the third or fourth annual edition of these yarns, with additions and variations. Singularly enough the ruthless firebugs have done very little damage (the hotel men are careful to have that understood) and "everything is being placed in readiness for the brilliant season which, &c., &c."

The embarrassments of an alliance between the Democrats and Flatists have already begun to crop out in Michigan, where such a combination has been made. The sound money Democrats in that State are protesting in vigorous terms against the prostitution of the party organization to the will and personal schemes of Flatism; and, at the same time, the honest Greenbackers who sympathize with the Republican party in other National issues declare outright that they will not be used to further the cause of State sovereignty, nor to approve the scheme for dishonest options, nor to restore the "Solid South" to undisputed control of National affairs and the Public Treasury.

MASONRY IN MICHIGAN.—Michigan has about 300 Masons who have reached the thirty-second degree in Free Masonry in the Scottish rite or branch. The thirty-second degree is the next to the last step in the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, the thirty third being the highest pinnacle of the mystic brotherhood. This degree is styled the Sovereign Grand Inspector General, and it is limited as to numbers, each Consistory having the power to nominate a man whenever a vacancy occurs. There are eighteen S. G. I. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

At a Baptist Church, in Baltimore, Md., a few nights ago, Miss Louisa Donaldson, while assisting to baptize a lady, suddenly expired. It was thought death was caused by some disease.

THE distribution of the net proceeds of the late pedestrian contest, in New York, is as follows, according to a dispatch of the 17th: Rowe, $21,548; Bauk, $12,300; Harriman, $8,300; O'Leary, $1,000. Weston, once an American pedestrian of some note, has, it is reported, disinherited Rowell for the possession of the belt, the match to come off in London, beginning on the 5th of May, and continuing six days.

A SCIENTIFIC examination of the "sulphur" which fell in the shower over the Hudson Valley, Pa., the other day, proves it to be the pollen from a species of pine, brought by the wind from the Jersey Coast.

A HOUSE near Ponca, Dakota, was destroyed by fire, a few days ago, and Mrs. Bigbey, a young years old, was burned to death.

THE following gems are found in the last of the President's Message to Congress, sent in on the 19th:

THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE and HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES: The balance of the last Congress leaves the appropriations for the various legislative and judicial purposes, for the payment of the pensions, and for the miscellaneous expenses of the Government, and for the support of the army, less than will be necessary to call a session of the forty-sixth Congress. The estimates of the appropriations needed, when sent to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury at the opening of last session, are renewed and are herewith transmitted to both the Senate and House of Representatives. Regretting the assistance and the emergency which requires a special session of Congress at a time when it is the general judgment of the country that no legislation will be hoped for, I recommend these new necessary measures to your considerate attention.

(Signed) RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, March 14, 1879.

ON the 19th, two men were instantly killed and four seriously injured by the premature explosion of dynamite in the Pottsville (Pa.) Colliery.

A THREE-CORNERED shooting affray occurred at Vicksburg, Miss., on the evening of the 20th, which resulted in the instant death of Capt. W. H. Andrews and W. L. Greene and the fatal wounding of Capt. W. F. Brandell. The difficulty arose over an election of officers of the Hibernian Society.

THE Southern Bank of New Orleans, the oldest bank in the city, failed a few days ago, and was placed in the hands of receivers. The deficiency is stated to be $700,000. The Mechanics' and Traders' Bank followed suit, and as soon as the news got abroad a panic ensued, and a run was precipitated directly mainly against the Canal, Louisiana State, Germania, Union and People's Banks. On the 20th, the Canal, Union and People's Banks should check out more than $200 in one day, and that all other drafts should be paid in certified coin. The failure of the last five banks whose temporary suspension was announced, on the 20th: Germania, Hibernia, Louisiana, Citizens', Drleans, Orleans and Union National Banks, Bank of Lafayette, Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, Citizens' Savings Bank, Louisiana Savings Bank, Metropolitan Bank, New Orleans Canal and Banking Company, Peoples' and Widows' Savings.

NOTICE was given, on the 20th, that the United States Treasury Department would at once redeem the called bonds embraced in the seventy-eighth to eighteen calls, inclusive, paying interest to date of redemption, or it would redeem at once the bonds included in said calls, with interest to date of maturity, and apply the proceeds to the payment of any subscription for 4-per-cent consols.

BARTHOLOMEW O'DONNELL, eighty years of age, finished an eighty-mile walk in twenty-six hours, at Brooklyn, N. Y., a few evenings ago.

THE Memphis (Tenn.) Cotton and Woolen Mills were struck by lightning, on the morning of the 23d, and entirely destroyed. Loss, $50,000. By this disaster 150 persons are thrown out of employment.

A MAN caught robbing a store at Jamestown, Ky., a few nights ago, was shot dead by the proprietor, who had been aroused by the noise made by the robber. Seven buckshot penetrated the body of the burglar.

A. B. HEARD, the paying-teller of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank of New Orleans, committed suicide by shooting himself with a revolver, on the morning of the 21st. The money in the safe of the bank was short, being counted by a civil officer, and Heard, being a defaulter in a large amount, it is thought the committed self-destruction to avoid the consequences of detection.

INFORMATION received in Washington, on the 22d, from Col. Walsh, who is in command of the mounted police on the Dakota frontier, reports that stirring Bull and his warriors were showing a very ugly and insubordinate disposition. They had, as yet, made no movement toward the boundary line, but serious trouble was apprehended as soon as spring should open. Col. Walsh estimated the strength of Sitting Bull's band at 7,000, all told, of whom 2,500 were warriors, well armed and equipped. Gen. Sherman decided to take active measures, by the formation of a troops, etc., to guard against the apprehended raid of Indians across the frontier, and a possible attack upon Forts Stedgeman, Buford and Totten.

Personal and Political.

In the case of the widow Mary S. Oliver against ex-Senator Simon Cameron, for $50,000 damage for breach of promise of marriage, which came up in the Circuit Court in Washington, on the 19th, the plaintiff testified that, in 1875, Mr. Cameron proposed marriage to her and she accepted. Letters from him were submitted, one of them closing with the sentence: "You will be my wife." Defendant did not come to the house where she lived, as he said the people there did not like it. She saw him quite often in Washington.

JAMES M. SUTHERLAND, a professional minstrel, better known as "ex-Senator Bob Hall," was baptized in the New York Berean Baptist Church, on the 16th. He has renounced the stage and proposes to devote himself hereafter to the Gospel solidarity.

IN the caucus of the House Republicans that resulted in the nomination of Mr. Garfield for Speaker, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this caucus that no legislation shall be entered upon during this session of Congress other than that for which the session was specially called.

THE National House of Representatives was organized, on the 18th, by the reelection of Mr. Randall as Speaker; Mr. Adams as Clerk; Mr. Thompson as Sergeant-at-Arms; Mr. Field as Doorkeeper; Mr. Stewart as Postmaster, and Rev. Dr. Harrison as Chaplain. Mr. Randall received 141 votes, the exact number required to elect.

SURROGATE COLVIN, of New York City, on the 19th, rendered a decision affirming the validity of the will of the late Commodore Vanderbilt. It was believed that the contestant would appeal.

REV. DR. DEKOVEN, of Racine, Wis., a distinguished Episcopal divine, died, on the 18th, from the effects of the heats. Dr. DeKoven was once elected Bishop of the Diocese of Illinois by the Diocesan Convention, but the Standing Committees refused to confirm the choice.

THE Republicans and Democrats of Rhode Island held their State Conventions at Providence, on the 20th. The former renominated the present State officers, and the latter nominated Thomas W. Logan for Governor; J. D. Bailey for Lieutenant-Governor; David S. Baker for Secretary of State; Charles H. Page for Attorney-General.

A GENERAL COURT-MARTIAL has been ordered for the trial of Col. R. S. Stanley, of the Twenty-second Infantry, and Col. Hazen, of the Sixth Infantry.

AT a caucus of Democratic Senators, held in Washington, on the 20th, Col. Bright, of Tennessee, was nominated for Secretary of the Senate, and E. J. Bright, of Indiana, for Sergeant-at-Arms.

GEN. F. A. WALKER was, on the 20th, nominated by the President to be Superintendent of the forthcoming Census.

ON the 20th, the National Executive Committee of the National Greenback party issued another address to the people of the United States, in which they state that no dependence is to be placed on the professions of the avowed friends to the cause; that the hope for financial relief within old party lines has been exhausted, and that they have been in several instances misled by manager of the party and others who obtained its support by pledging possible through a new organization to found a party which shall accomplish the desired end. To succeed, a uniform organization must be made, and a position bold, aggressive, independent and uncompromising must be taken.

A TELEGRAM from Santa Anna, Southern California, of the 20th, states that a man whom Dennis Kearney had severely tradueed in a speech, after waiting until the speech was published, gave the orator an unmerciful beating.

ABOUT 100 Democrats and thirty-four Republicans and independents have been elected to the Louisiana State Constitutional Convention.

IN a recent letter to the public, Archbishop Purcell, of the Diocese of Cincinnati, narrates the causes which led to his present pecuniary embarrassment, gives in detail his expenditures on behalf of the Diocese, which he says should have been borne by the ministers of the churches, and declares that but for the generous sympathy of Catholics and Protestants alike he would have sunk under the weight of his troubles. He makes an appeal to all Catholics and others who feel for others' woes to help him out of his embarrassments.

THE joint Democratic caucus of both houses of Congress met, on the 22d, and decided upon the "reclassification" of the Election laws by repealing the provisions repealing the office of Chief Supervisor, and those relative to the appointment of Deputy Marshals. The modification further contemplates the appointment of one officer from each party who shall have no authority, but who shall be allowed to inspect and scrutinize the votingbills, challenge voters, etc., and to have only powers of inspection and observation. It was also decided to repeal Sec. 5,522, which prescribes penalties for interfering with Supervisors, etc. A motion also prevailed to send to the President these measures attached to the various Appropriation bills, as during the last Congress. No decision was reached in respect to general legislation.

A BILL has been introduced in the Illinois House of Representatives to annex the City of St. Louis to the State of Illinois.

Foreign.

ACCORDING to London dispatches of the 17th, it was not true that Col. Pearson had defeated the Zulus at Ekowe, with great slaughter, as had been previously reported. The Zulus spread the report therefore to prevent the sending of reinforcements. The Orange Free State Government had refused to aid, or permit its citizens to aid, the British against the Zulus.

ON the 20th, the German Reichstag adopted, without debate, a motion to suspend proceedings against the Socialist Deputy Fritzsche during the Parliamentary session.

THE French Boating battery Arrogante recently foundered off Ryeres. Of the 320 persons on board, forty-seven were drowned.

QUESNEL BROS., of Havre, failed, on the 21st, for 2,000,000 francs.

A PARIS telegram of the 22d says the expenses of the International Exposition will be 50,000,000 francs, and the receipts 30,000,000 francs.

A CAPE TOWN (South Africa) dispatch, received on the 25th, says the Moirsura people had rebelled against the British authority.

A LATE arrival from Yokohama reports the continued depreciation of the paper currency of Japan. The Japan had threatened to make the 1,000 Choo Islands a dependency of the Empire.

ACCORDING to Madrid dispatches of the 25th, fourteen members of the former Deputies of the Cortes had issued a manifesto to the Democratic party in Spain, announcing as their programme a sincere return to the Constitution of 1807; universal suffrage; the inviolability of Spanish territory; payment of interest on the public debt; religious toleration absolute; freedom of the press; etc.

A TELEGRAM from Calcutta, received on the 25th, reports that complete anarchy prevailed in Mandalay.

XLVI. Congress—Extra Session.

THE Forty-sixth Congress assembled in special session, on the 18th. At noon the Vice-President called the Senate to order, and after prayer by Chaplain Newman, the proclamation convening the extra session was read. The Senators-elect were then sworn in after which the credentials of Mr. Bell, of New Hampshire, who came in with the call of Governor to fill the vacancy, were submitted. Mr. Wallace moved to withdraw the motion to lay the credentials on the table for one day, but Bayard objected to the consideration of the facts in the case; the question involved, he said, was not one of fact, but of law, and the vacancy being caused by neglect of the Governor to act, the Senate had clearly no original jurisdiction. Mr. Bayard, precedents with a view of showing that Mr. Bell should be admitted, but Mr. Wallace's resolution was renewed. Mr. Thurman objected to the consideration of the resolution, to which Mr. Wallace replied that the Senate had the right to decide. Mr. Thurman made a brief address on resuming the Speaker's chair, and took the oath of office, and ministered the same to the members, objection being made to the swearing in of Mr. Bell. Hon. Frank Hiscock, of Syracuse, was then re-elected Doorkeeper, Field, Postmaster, Stewart, Chaplain, Rev. W. H. Harrison. Secretary Sessions was then drawn for, and the House adjourned.

A NUMBER of bills were introduced in the Senate, on the 18th, the most important being the following: To reorganize the army; to repeal all political disabilities imposed by the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment; to repeal the act of July, 1862, requiring the testoath; authorizing the issue of legal-tender Treasury notes; joint resolution providing for the enforcement of the Republican platform. Mr. Edmunds offered a resolution, which was objected to and went over, that all bills and joint resolutions except those making appropriations for the support of the army and for the legislative, executive and judicial expenses of the Government, shall be referred to appropriate committees, and not be reported until after the first (December) session of the present Congress. A number of the members of the Kansas Legislature was presented and referred, touching the late election of Senator Ingalls was secured by bribery, corruption, and seeking the Senate for a full opportunity to offer proof of the assertion. The credentials of Mr. Bell as Senator from New Hampshire were, on motion of Mr. Wallace, referred to the Judiciary Committee. The President's Message was received, read and referred. Mr. Bayard offered a resolution declaring that the Electoral Commission of 1877 was illegal and unconstitutional, and that the election of Hayes and Wheeler was void. Referred to Judiciary Committee. Mr. Hill introduced a bill to amend the Revised Statutes so as to prohibit the appointment to the army of any person engaged in the late Rebellion; providing for the organization of the Mississippi River Improvement Commission; the deepening of the channel of the river and the protection of alluvial lands; authorizing the purchase of foreign-built steamships by citizens of the United States; providing for refunding the Internal Revenue taxes illegally collected; providing for the payment of certain army claims; providing for the issue of duplicate land warrants in lieu of those lost or destroyed; providing for the issue of duplicate land warrants in lieu of those lost or destroyed; providing for the issue of duplicate land warrants in lieu of those lost or destroyed

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

On the 24th, Nathan P. Pratt, Treasurer of the Reading (Mass.) Savings Bank, was arrested for the embezzlement of the greater part of the securities belonging to the institution. The sum taken is variously estimated at from $60,000 to $100,000.

A COLLISION occurred, on the 25th, between two trains on the New York Elevated Railroad. Both engines were totally wrecked, and sixteen persons were more or less injured — none fatally.

IT was stated, on the 25th, that the financial troubles in New Orleans were over, and that the banks were paying currency on demand, without restriction.

THE Convent of the Sisters of Loretto, at Cairo, Ill., was struck by lightning, early on the morning of the 26th, and entirely consumed. All the inmates escaped.

A NEGRO named Bill Howard, who had perpetrated a horrible outrage near Fort Scott, Kan., two months ago, on the 26th, was lodged in jail. On the next evening a crowd of infuriated citizens, to the number of about 1,000, took the prisoner from the jail and hanged him to a lamp-post near the public square. They afterward took the body and burned it in a fire made of dry goods boxes and coal oil.

A SIX days' walking contest, engaged in by eighteen female pedestrians, was begun in Grimmo's Garden, New York City, on the night of the 30th. One of the contestants withdrew soon after the walk began. It was stated that the women were subject to all manner of jesting and insulting remarks from the crowd of men who were present.

A NEW invention in telegraphy has been recently made by which it is alleged messages can be sent with wonderful rapidity, by simply turning a crank, and at a rate not exceeding twenty-five cents for thirty words from New York to any point east of the Rocky Mountains. A company has been formed, and it is stated that lines will be in operation between the West and the seaboard by September.

THE Secretary of the Treasury reports that of the 21,661,374 silver dollars coined, only 8,405,070 remain in circulation.

SEC'Y SHERMAN issued a call on the 29th for the redemption of $10,000,000 coupon bonds of 1867, interest and principal payable July 1, 1880.

THE Tremont House at Claremont, N. H., was destroyed by fire, on the 29th ult., and five persons—four women and one man—were burned to death. Two men and one woman were severely injured by leaping from the windows.

A. RAYWOOD (D. T.) telegram of the 29th says that Little Wolf and his band of Cheyennes, numbering thirty-five lodges, with 250 ponies, had been captured on Hat Rock Creek, near the Yellowstone River, by Lieut. Clark, of the Second Cavalry, four days before.

Personal and Political.

THE President, on the 24th, nominated Alexander Hamilton, jr., to be Supervising Surgeon-General of the United States Marine Hospital Service; John M. Wilson, of Connecticut, to be Panama, and George Scroggs, of Illinois, Consul at Hamburg.

THE trial of Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage began, on the 24th, before Brooklyn Trinitytery. The principal charges were falsehood and deceit. He pleaded not guilty, and demanded an immediate hearing, claiming technicalities in his favor. It was finally decided to try him on all the specifications.

THE lower House of the Rhode Island Legislature favored a proposition, on the 24th, to give women the right to vote. The vote stood 25 to 23, a majority, but not the Constitutional majority required.

THE Republican members of the National House of Representatives held a caucus on the 27th, at which a unanimous sentiment was manifested in opposition to the political clauses which the majority had determined to incorporate in the Army and Legislative Appropriation bills, and it was agreed that every endeavor should be made by the minority to prevent the passage of the bills named unless they should be relieved of such political provisions. It was resolved that it was the sense of the caucus that, until the Appropriation bills were disposed of, no pairs by Republicans should be made under any circumstances.

A CAUCUS composed of about thirty members of the National House of Representatives, including Messrs. Reagan and Jones (of Texas), Springer, Stevenson, Ewing, Mutch, Ladd, Kelley, De LaMayr, Weaver, Warner, Wright and Wise, was held on the 28th, and resolved in favor of endeavoring to pass, at the present session of Congress, measures to increase the coinage of silver to the capacity of the mints, and to issue certificates, receivable for all public dues and the purchase of silver bullion at market rates; to release the greenbacks now held for the redemption of fractional currency, or hereafter retired, for the payment of arrears of pensions and in the extinguishment of the bonded debt; to provide for the substitution of legal-tender notes for National Bank notes; to stop all further increase of the National debt; to provide for a tax on incomes of over $2,000. A committee was appointed to prepare a Silver bill.

THE social circles of Hartford, Conn., have recently been considerably excited by the announcement of the clandestine marriage of the youngest daughter of ex-Gov. Hubbard to her father's coachman. The man's name is Frederick Shepard, a rather fine appearing young man of twenty-five, of American parentage and of fair reputation. It seems the young lady formed a romantic attachment for the coachman while engaged in assisting him to acquire an education. He had been in the employ of Gov. Hubbard for about a year. It was stated that the Governor would positively refuse all advances toward a reconciliation with his daughter.

XLVI. Congress—Extra Session.

COMMUNICATIONS were received in the Senate, on the 24th, asking for additional appropriations for the pay of letter-carriers and for an appropriation of $26,640 for payment of Interest Bonds in the hands of citizens. A bill was introduced to prevent the introduction and circulation of infectious diseases into the United States. A resolution was passed requiring the Secretary of War to furnish to the Senate a statement of the amounts of money drawn and paid by Secretary Belknap, Generals Sheridan, Sherman, Hancock, Terry and Augur, as compensation in excess of the fees allowed by law for Circuit Court Commissioners, and state the amount expended in New York, Louisiana and Kentucky for the purpose of subsistence of the troops stationed there. A number of bills were introduced and referred.

According to the Senate Journal, Hamlin, Wallace, Conkling, Bayard, Beck, Voorhees, Thurman and Jones, members of the Committee on Claiming John C. Bates elected Secretary of the Senate, on the 5th inst., did not vote. Messrs. Anthony, F. E. Shober, Chief Clerk; Henry B. Peyton, Executive Clerk, and J. G. Fuller, Chaplain, Motions on the part of Republicans to substitute the name of other candidates were voted down.

On the 25th inst., the Indian Viceroy telegraphed to the Government that the British forces had defeated an Afghan force to report forthwith a rule providing that no bills except those making necessary appropriations shall be reported from any committee, or considered by the House, during the special session. Messrs. Ewing and Regan objected, and Mr. Conger said he would then object to Mr. Cox's resolution, but the speaker ruled that the objection came too late. Mr. Conger then moved to reconsider the vote by which Mr. Cox's resolution was referred, and Mr. Cox moved to lay that motion on the table, pending which the House adjourned—138 to 81.

During the introduction of a number of bills in the Senate, on the 27th, Mr. Hoar's resolution declaring the course of the majority revolutionary, etc., came up, and was debated by Messrs. Hoar, Beck, Bayard and Voorhees, but no final action was taken. Adjourned to the 28th. The Army appropriation bill was discussed in the House, by Mr. Hewitt, who stated that it was substantially the bill which passed the last House, with the reorganization features stricken out, the clause prohibiting the use of troops at the polls was retained, the bill was reported to the Committee of the Whole, when a motion to reduce the army to 15,000 men was rejected—97 to 151. Mr. Hewitt moved to substitute a bill to repeal certain provisions relating to political crimes, which the majority had determined to incorporate in the Army and Legislative Appropriation bills, and it was agreed that every endeavor should be made by the minority to prevent the passage of the bills named unless they should be relieved of such political provisions. It was resolved that it was the sense of the caucus that, until the Appropriation bills were disposed of, no pairs by Republicans should be made under any circumstances.

A CAUCUS composed of about thirty members of the National House of Representatives, including Messrs. Reagan and Jones (of Texas), Springer, Stevenson, Ewing, Mutch, Ladd, Kelley, De LaMayr, Weaver, Warner, Wright and Wise, was held on the 28th, and resolved in favor of endeavoring to pass, at the present session of Congress, measures to increase the coinage of silver to the capacity of the mints, and to issue certificates, receivable for all public dues and the purchase of silver bullion at market rates; to release the greenbacks now held for the redemption of fractional currency, or hereafter retired, for the payment of arrears of pensions and in the extinguishment of the bonded debt; to provide for the substitution of legal-tender notes for National Bank notes; to stop all further increase of the National debt; to provide for a tax on incomes of over $2,000. MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—It is stated that in one small river, not far from Nancy, France, there are annually collected some 25,000 kilograms of the "ablette," a small white fish, from which is obtained a substance called the essence of d'orient, and is employed in the manufacture of artificial pearls. This substance accompanies the scales of the ablette, and is detached when the scales are rubbed up for a considerable time and thrown into a vase of water; to collect it, the water is poured off from the vase upon a thin hair sieve, which retains the scales and allows the water and the product sought to pass through it. The latter sinks to the bottom, and is obtained pure by decanting the water, a little ammonia being added to prevent its decomposition.

—More than eight years ago the city authorities of London offered a prize for any invention which would enable them to get rid of snow in the streets. Seventeen schemes were submitted. The successful apparatus was at once erected, and has been in operation every year since. It consists simply of an inclined plate of iron, fixed below a main-hole leading to the main sewer. Under this plate are arranged gas-burners. The snow carted from the adjoining thoroughfares is shoveled down the main-hole-opening, falls on the inclined plate, is reduced to water and passes away down the sewer. The consumption of gas is very moderate, and the cost is said to be much less than that incurred in carting away the snow on the old system. The apparatus, says the Engineer, has proved extremely successful, and the invention deserves to be widely adopted.

—The opinion has become quite prevalent among engineers, in respect to ventilation of sewers and drains, that the poisonous and mephitic vapors should be allowed to escape into the atmosphere, so that the sewers be purified—thus contaminating the atmosphere and transposing the pure air into the sewers where it is not needed, and from the sewers bringing the poisonous gases. The objection urged against this theory is that the liberated gases are heavier than atmospheric air, and, if liberated from the sewers, must hug the surface of the earth, so as to exercise a disagreeable effect. My own view is, it is urged, is to give the sewers plenty of water, which carries the matter contained in them to the sea, impedes decomposition at the source, and the solid matter is sufficiently immersed, and is a powerful absorbent of sewer gases, especially if carbonaceous. Again, it takes upto the extent of about one-third its weight, or some four hundred times its own bulk.

—An ingenious contrivance for awakening a sleeper at any required hour is announced among the recent inventions in Switzerland. It is to be fixed on an ordinary clock, and is so arranged that when the hour-hand of the clock touches a button, an electric circuit is completed, the minute-hand passing over the button without effect. There are a series of holes for the different hours, into any one of which the button can be pushed, according to the time selected for awakening. The completion of the electric circuit may ring a bell or sound any other of the ordinary methods of alarm. But this contrivance has a yet more effective method for arousing a deaf man, or any sleeper who is disposed to prolong himself beforehand for a shock: a bracelet is provided, which can be put on the wrist at the time of retiring; to this flexible wires are attached from the electric battery. Sweet repose! Special attention was paid to Bendall's clothes, because it is said half of the oil-city thieves rush frequently secure.

THE SUB-COMMITTEE AT PHILADELPHIA.

The Sub-Committee of the Wallace-Teller Investigating Committee, consisting of Senators Wallace (Pa.), Garland (Ark.), McDonald (Ind.), Hoar (Mass.), and Cameron (Wis.), met in Philadelphia, on the 26th, and commenced an examination of witnesses.

The first witness was R. G. Rowell, of the Second Division of the Twentieth Ward. He testified that Deputy-Marshal Charles Ulipbast was present on election-day, and insulted every Democrat that came to the polls to vote. His testimony was corroborated by other witnesses who also identified Ulipbast. Several more witnesses were examined after a few unimportant questions.

John Wanger, a twenty-ninth Ward, testified that Thomas Herr, the United States Marshal in his ward, had insulted and repeatedly refused a man for trying to vote, notwithstanding that parties were trying to vote for the Army. Another witness, of the Fifteenth Ward, a United States Marshal, was also charged with intimidating voters.

Jesse Harris, John Hudson and John Brown swore that Deputy-Marshal Sauns was drunk all day. Nine or ten persons were not on the list, but they did not know personally if there were illegal votes cast. Forty or fifty Deputy Marshals were subsidized by other witnesses who also identified Ulipbast. Several more persons testified to having Democratic votes.

Patrick Shirley and George Thompson testified that Deputy-Marshal James Brown was arrested in 1872 for illegal voting.

The Clerk of the United States Court produced his record and showed that Brown was convicted and fined $100 and costs.

A number of witnesses testified as to intimidation and theft arrest by Deputy Marshals and the return of their poll-tax receipts without vote.

Detective Charles Miller, of the District Attorney's office, testified that he had investigated the Seventeenth Division of the Nineteenth Ward.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, APL. 8, - - - 1879.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York Mar. 31, 1879.

Editor Sentinel.

Telegraphy has been so long in universal use throughout civilization, and its existence and methods are taken so much as matters of course, that probably but few people realize that the science is yet almost in its infancy. Recent experiments are said to have opened up vast possibilities in the direction of improvement, and it is even claimed that a great deal has already been practically accomplished. A company has just been formed here with a large capital to establish lines in competition with those existing between the great cities—an enterprise so costly and so difficult that nothing but immense wealth could possibly attempting it. The managers of the new company state that by their plan they confidently expect within three years to be able to telegraph ordinary business letters to and from all parts of the country, at about ten cents apiece. They claim that by virtue of their new discoveries they can transmit sixty thousand words per hour.

Another indication in the same direction is the recent establishment of a new ocean cable company which expects by working under a new system to flash two thousand words a minute along the bed of the sea, from Europe to America, or vice versa. All the promoters of these new enterprises are very positive and sanguine in their statements, and even talking off the usual discounts from their stories, it seems probable that we are upon the eve of what may fairly be called a new telegraphic era.

A little more than a week ago, the new and very important branch of the East Side Elevated Railroad, running from City Hall square to Chatham Square, was opened for travel, and only a day or two after this event, there occurred on this road the first really serious accident in the history of the elevated system. Two trains collided fortunately at a low rate of speed, two engines were smashed, and a number of persons were seriously injured. Every thing about the accident, except the occurrence itself, was miraculously fortunate, and no one was killed outright. It is said that it would be almost impossible for the event to be repeated without throwing the trains to the streets below with mad rous results. The accident was due to a misplaced switch, and has created so much fear and anxiety that the company have announced their determination to abandon branch switches altogether, and transfer passengers at junctions as a measure of safety.

That was a unique entertainment which was given by a prominent member of the Roosevelt family the other evening, and christened by the host "a pot luck picnic" The distinguishing characteristic of the affair was that all its viands were supposed to have been prepared by the ladies and gentlemen present. The cards of invitation stated that "any guest feeling within herself or himself the divine confidence of cookery, is requested to supply the dish in which he or she excels." In several cases, the recipient of the invitation was informed of the nature of the eatable which he was expected to provide. The result was a triumphant success. The company was large, distinguished and hungry, and each course was naturally the object of the liveliest interest.

Mr. Roosevelt himself contributed a fine fish chowder, Mrs. J. C. Croly ("Jennie June") President of Sorosis, a noble plumb pudding, Clara Morris a ravishing peach custard, Joaquin Miller made the coffee, ex-Mayor Ely, officiated as a sort of chief cook, and various other lesser notabilities laid institutions offerings upon the gastronomic altar. The whole affair was such a novelty and such a success that it is likely to set a very pleasant and enjoyable fashion.

One of the many queer incidents daily coming to the surface of New York life, occurred on Wall street a few days ago. A young woman stood on one of the corners of the street begging alms of the passers by, and attracting much attention from the fact that she wore a silk dress, and had every appearance of being a lady. After a while some one suspected her of being insane and called her to be arrested and taken to a Police Court, where it came out that she was the wife of a well known gentleman in good circumstances living in Harlem. She gave as a reason for her strange exploit, that her husband did not give her all the money she wanted and that she had done the same thing before without her husband's finding it out, and as she had made a little money out of it, she didn't see any harm in it. Her husband was at once telegraphed for and took her home to her waiting children.

After a good deal of preliminary pal ever the Brooklyn Presbytery have got down to work on Brother Talmage's case, and are now trying the celebrated pulpit contortionist with as much gravity as the subject will admit. The indictments hand against the reverend athlete charge him with professional deceit and with a lack of reverence for sacred things, as displayed in his public ministrations. Whatever may be the fate of the former count, there should be no reasonable doubt of the result on the latter charge, for not even the most violent scoffers at religion treat church service with so much irreverence as the pastor of the Tabernacle. Of course there is no hope of permanently suppressing Mr. Talmage, but still the proceedings may not be without their use.

The excitement in municipal politics, some details of which I gave last week, still rages. Tammany, after a few days of ominous quiet has declared open war with Mayor Cooper, and a long struggle is likely to follow.

The Mayor has even received an anonymous letter which coolly informs him that unless he engages to exercise in regard to the Police Commissioners the will surely be assassinated. The threat-ened martyr, however, as yet shows no signs of weakening. RADIX.

The Communists of Chicago held a meeting at the Exposition Building a few nights ago, which was attended by an immense crowd, including about 500 men who marched through the streets in uniform, with muskets on their shoulders and a red flag flying above them. Who says this isn't a free country?

"All persons having any knowledge of the burial places of soldiers in private cemeteries, whose graves are not marked are requested to communicate the fact to the quartermaster general of the army, at Washington. Similar information is desired from parties in charge of such cemeteries. The government will then undertake to mark such graves with appropriate headstones. The term "private cemeteries," as used above, means other than government cemeteries.

Great Britian has an easy way of getting rid of undesirable citizens in Ireland which is calculated to excite interest in this country. According to the Pall Mall Budget, of March 1st, "Patrick Macnamara, who was put on his trial three times for the murder of Patrick Kearney, at Cruiseen, County Clare, was released last week on condition of his leaving the country and proceeding to the United States." There was a miscarriage of justice twice in his case, owing to informality in the proceedings, and at the last assizes, when he was tried before Mr. Justice Barry, at Cork, the jury disagreed. His expenses to America will be paid by the crown.

The Meridan (Miss.) Mercury proposes to send Jeff Davis to the United States Senate "because he is a statesman as full of wisdom and State craft as he is full of peace." A "great and good man" who held the highest position for us in the midst of flagrant war," and who again in the seat he once adorned could and would expedite the happy day" of peace. The people of the North, having had experience of the kind of "peace" Davis gave to the country once before, do not relish the idea of another such experiment. It would be an insult to every loyal man in the land, and an outrage on the memory of the hundreds of thousands who fell in battle fighting for the Union, to send the traitor back to the Senate.

I can scarcely credit the report that any member of Congress, especially of any northern member, could so soon forget the past as to have the impudence to raise and laud the merits of one Jeff. Davis, the arch traitor to his country and champion of state's rights sovereignty. It calls to my mind an incident fresh in my memory, I happened to be in his native state upon his return from Portland, Me, where he had been making speeches previous to the outbreak of the Rebellion, at the time he was hosten by H. S. Foote for Governor.

It was his custom, upon his return home, to greet his fellow citizens with a speech. I was standing not a few paces in front of him, and listened with marked attention to every word. He spoke of the condition of the country, of its natural resources; of his own fair and sunny land; of its "time honored institutions;" of the slocation clan at in the northern states his denunciations upon the theme became fearfully painful His cheeks, lows, last his eyes sparkled my groomed cotton unholy light, showing the very spirit within. He wound up with these words as they fairly hissed hot through his teeth yet sufficiently distinct to be heard at the remotest part of the large crowd assembled:

FELLOW CITIZENS—in view of our wrongs, and in the face of our just rights—in defense of our homes, our firesides, our property and our cherished institutions, handed down to us from our forefathers, the time is fast approaching, and I pray God, to hasten the day, when we, as a southern people, to maintain all we hold dear, shall be compelled to bury the knife up to the very hilt in the heart's blood of the entire Yankee nation!—Correspondence Chicago Journal.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, APR. 8, . . . 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York Mar 31, 1879

EDITOR SENTINEL.

Telegraphy has been so long in universal use throughout civilization, and its existence and methods are taken so much as matters of course, that probably but few people realize that the science is yet almost in its infancy. Recent experiments are said to have opened up vast possibilities in the direction of improvement, and it is even claimed that a great deal has already been practically accomplished. A company has just been formed here with a large capital to establish lines in competition with those existing between the great cities—an enterprise so costly and so difficult that nothing but improvement could justify attempting it. The managers of the new company state that by their plan they confidently expect within three years to be able to telegraph ordinary business letters to and from all parts of the country, at about ten cents apiece. They claim that by virtue of their new discoveries they can transmit sixty thousand words per hour.

Another indication in the same direction is the recent establishment of a new ocean cable company which expects by working under a new system to flash two thousand words a minute along the bed of the sea, from Europe to America, or vice versa. All the promoters of these new enterprises are very positive and sanguine in their statements, and even taking off the usual discounts from their stories, it seems promising that we are upon the ere of what may fairly be called a new telegraphic era.

A little more than a week ago, the new and very important branch of the East Side Elevated Railroad, running from City Hall square to Chatham Square, was opened for travel, and only a day or two after this event, there occurred on this road the first really serious accident in the history of the elevated system. Two trains collided fortunately at a low rate of speed, two engines were smashed, and a number of persons were seriously injured. Everything about the accident, except the occurrence itself, was miraculously fortunate, as of no one was killed outright. It is said that it would be almost impossible for the event to be repeated without throwing the trains to the streets below with murderous results. The accident was due to a misplaced switch, and has created so much fear and anxiety that the company have announced their determination to abandon branch switches altogether, and transfer passengers at junctions as a measure of safety.

That was a unique entertainment which was given by a prominent member of the Roosevelt family the other evening, and christened by the host "a pot-luck picnic." The distinguishing characteristic of the affair was that all its viands were supposed to have been prepared by the ladies and gentlemen present. The cards of invitation stated that "any guest feeling within herself or himself the divine confidence of cookery, is requested to supply the dish in which he or she excels." In several cases, the recipient of the invitation was informed of the nature of the eatable which he was expected to provide. The result was a triumphant success. The company was large, distinguished and hungry, and each course was naturally the object of the liveliest interest.

Mr. Roosevelt himself contributed a fine fish chowder. Mrs. J. C Croly ("Jennie June") President of Sorosis, a noble plumb pudding. Clara Morris a ravishing peach custard. Joaquin Miller made the coffee, ex Major Ely officiated as a sort of chief cook, and various other lesser notabilities laid toothsome offerings upon the gastronomic altar. The whole affair was such a novelty and such a success that it is likely to set a very pleasant and enjoyable fashion.

One of the many queer incidents daily coming to the surface of New York life, occurred on Wall street a few days ago. A young woman stood on one of the corners of the street begging alms of the passers by, and attracting much attention from the fact that she wore a silk dress, and had every appearance of being a lady. After a while some one suspected her of being insane and caused her to be arrested and taken to a Police Court, where it came out that she was the wife of a well known gentleman in good circumstances living in Harlem. She gave as a reason for her strange exploit, that her husband did not give her all the money she wanted and that she had done the same thing before without her husband's finding it out, and as she had made a little money out of it, she didn't see any harm in it. Her husband was at once telegraphed for and took her home to her waiting children.

After a good deal of preliminary parleying the Brooklyn Presbytery have got down to work on Brother Talmage's case, and are now trying the celebrated pulpit contortionist with as much gravity as the subject will admit. The indictments found against the reverend athletic charge him with two sets of acts and with a lack of reverence for sacred things, as displayed in his public ministrations. Whatever may be the fate of the former count, there should be no reasonable doubt of the result on the latter charge, for not even the most virulent scoffers at religion treat church service with much less respect than the pastor of the Tabernacle. Of course there is no hope of permanently suppressing Mr. Talmage, but still the proceedings may not be without their use.

The excitement in municipal politics, some details of which I gave last week, still rages. Tammany, after a few days of ominous quiet has declared open war with Mayor Cooper, and a long struggle is likely to follow.

The Mayor has even received an anonymous letter which coolly informs him that unless he changes his course in regard to the Police Commissioners he will surely be assassinated. The threat ended martly, however, as yet shows no signs of weakening. RADIX.

The Communists of Chicago held a meeting at the Exposition Building a few nights ago, which was attended by an immense crowd, including about 500 men who marched through the streets in uniform, with muskets on their shoulders and a red flag flying above them. Who says this isn't a free country?

"All persons having any knowledge of the unmarked places of soldiers in private cemeteries, whose graves are not marked are requested to communicate the fact to the quarter master general of the army, at Washington. Similar information is desired from parties in charge of such cemeteries. The government will then undertake to mark such graves with appropriate headstones. The term 'private cemeteries,' as used above, means other than government cemeteries.

Great Britian has an easy way of getting rid of undesirable citizens in Ireland which is calculated to excite interest in this country. According to the Pall Mall Budget, of March 1st, "Patrick Macnamara, who was put on his trial three times for the murder of Patrick Kearney, at Crushcen, County Clare, was released last week on condition of his leaving the country and proceeding to the United States." There was a miscarriage of justice twice in his case, owing to informality in the proceedings, and at the last assizes, when he was tried before Mr. Justice Barry, at Cork, the jury disagreed. His expenses to America will be paid by the crown.

The Meriden (Miss.) Mercury proposes to send Jeff Davis to the United States Senate "because he is a statesman as full of wisdom and State craft as he is full of years." A "great and good man," "who held the highest position for us in the midst of flagrant war," and who "again in the seat he once adorned could and would expedite the happy day" of peace. The people of the North, having had experience of the kind of "peace" Davis gave to the country once before, do not relish the idea of another such experiment. It would be an insult to every loyal man in the land, and an outrage on the memory of the hundreds of thousands who fell in battle fighting for the Union, to send the traitor back to the Senate.

I can scarcely credit the report that any member of Congress, especially of any northern member, could so soon forget the past as to have the impudence to raise and land the merits of one Jeff. Davis, the arch traitor to his country and champion of state's rights sovereignty. It calls to my mind an incident fresh in my memory. I happened to be in his native state upon his return from Portland, Me. where he had been making speeches previous to the outbreak of the Rebellion, at the time he was beaten by H. S. Foote for Governor.

It was his custom, upon his return home, to greet his fellow citizens with a speech. I was standing not a few paces in front of him, and listened with marked attention to every word. He spoke of the condition of the country; of its natural resources; of its own fair and sunny land; of its "time honored institutions" of the sacrifices made in the northern states like clouds on a mountain top. His countenance became fearfully painful. His sunken, keen, fanatic eyes sparkled as they gleamed out an unholy light, showing the very spirit within. He wound up with these words as they fairly hissed hot through his teeth yet sufficiently distinct to be heard at the remotest part of the large crowd assembled.

FELLOW CITIZENS—In view of our wrongs, and in defense of our just rights—in defense of our homes, our firesides, our property and our cherished institutions, handed down to us from our forefathers, the time is fast approaching and I pray God to hasten the day, when we, as a southern people, to maintain all we hold dear, shall be compelled to bury the knife up to the very hilt in the heart's blood of the entire Yankee nation!—Correspondence Chicago Journal.

Why Will You

Allow a cold to advance in your system and thus encourage more serious disorders, such as Pneumonia, Bronchitis and Lung troubles when an immediate relief can be easily obtained. Boschee's German Syrup was introduced the largest sale in the world for the cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung Diseases. It is Dr. Boschee's famous German prescription, and is prepared with the greatest care, and no one need be afraid to use it in administering it to the youngest child, as per directions. The sale of this medicine is unprecedented. Since first introduced there has been a constant increasing demand, and without a single report of a failure to do its work in any case. Ask your Druggist as to the truth of these remarks. Large size 75 cents. Try it and be convinced. Sold by Geo. W. Courtzen.

Notice of Dissolution.

Notice is hereby given that the copartnership lately existing between Byron See and Orange S. Washburn of Charlevoix, Mich. under the firm name of See & Washburn, was dissolved on the 16th day of January, 1879, by mutual consent. All debts owing to the said copartnership are to be received by said Byron See, and all demands on the said firm are assumed by said Byron See, who is authorized to settle all debts due to and by the firm.

Byron See,
Orange S. Washburn.

French Costumes.

The first large importation of Parisian dresses consists entirely of short costumes for the street. These are made up principally of basques of most varied designs, with trimmed skirts representing an over-skirt drapery that is fastened permanently on the lower skirt. Other suits consist of but one piece, as the back—whether a basque or princesse—is sewed to the back of the skirt, and the entire dress is put on at once. What constitutes the chief difference between the costumes of last season and those of the spring is the more elaborate draping in the way of shirred and folded fronts and softly puffed backs and hips that give the bouffant effect of panniers. The lower skirt remains narrow, has the same shaped gores, and is still simply trimmed with a narrow border flounce, unless on the front or side a deeper trimming is needed to meet the over-skirt. Box-pleated flounces, plain regular pleatings, closetered pleatings, and those with spaces between are all used. These are invariably made straight across the goods (bias and gathered flounces have for the moment disappeared); two to five rows of small knife-pleatings are also seen, especially in satin and in striped goods.

The thickest fabrics in the new over-skirts are the shirred fronts and the soft bouffant back drapery. The shirring will extend in a broad cluster down the middle of the front of the apron, and also down each side of it. Sometimes the shirring gathers all the fullness of the apron near the top, and the ends then slope away like curtains, and are edged with fringe, or it may be they have a three-cornered revers added below on each side. In other cases the upper part of the front breadth is covered only by the basque, and the shirring gathers all the apron fullness very low down on the lower skirt. In still other models the shirrings extend diagonally across the front, and the apron is very short, and is edged with a broad retrousse band of the striped or else brocaded goods. These turned-up bands are seen on variations of the favorite washer-woman overskirt, and are made more effective by being made of a fabric in strong contrast to the dress material. For instance, in the useful wool costumes called the Fair Maid of Perth suits, the soft sheer wool fabric of the dress is of a single color, such as cream, claret, olive, garnet blue, black, or ribbon green, while the vest, the panels, and the retrousse bands are of gay plaids in the gayest new combinations of colors. The apron of the over-skirt has soft folds across it, the broad plaid band is low down, and a panel on one side is of the plaid laid in three lengthwise pleats. The back is made bouffant by softly draped breadths caught up from the lower edge high on the sides and bordered with the plaid. The wool stuff used in these suits is as sheer as bunting, but is not wiry and harsh.

The basques are in endless variety, comprising the Pompadour basque with square front, the vest basque, either single or double-breasted, the pleated fronts, the postilion, the coat basque, the pinaforo, the fan back, the fichu front, and so on throughout the list. They are only uniform in being shorter than the plain cuirass, which is not in harmony with the short bouffant skirts. The novelty in vests is a sort of oval-shaped opening of the basque upon them, but every variety of the vest basque as now worn is seen in the newly-imported dresses. Those which seem most popular dispenses with a separate vest, and has the vest material laid directly upon the lining, with the fabric of the outside dress sloped away to show the vest beneath; and these are most stylish when lapped, as if double-breasted, and secured by two rows of buttons, having three or four in each row. Shirred or pleated plastrons fill up the square Pompadour openings at the neck of other basques; it some cases these are sewed in with revers on each side, in others they are made separately like bibs. The great many kerchief collars like shirred fichus, or else merely folds, are made of the soft silk or satin trimming edged with fringe or lace as a finish for the neck of basques. The short side forms of the basques are almost universal. Postilion pleats and fans are quite flat in the back, and begin below the waist line usually. Plain or gored edges still prevail. Sleeves have very small neat cuffs, and sometimes a fan is set in the outer seam near the wrist.—Harper's Bazar.

The Earth's Independence of the Sun.

Prof. Pierce, of Harvard College, in a recent lecture in Boston, set forth some facts of interest in regard to the earth's independence of the sun's heat, which may be consoling to persons who accept the theory that the center of our solar system may lose its warmth. Could the organisms upon the earth withstand any great decrease of the sun's heat? To reply to this question, he said, we must remember that the earth's surface depends for its temperature not merely upon the heat which it receives, but also upon that which it is constantly radiating. With a small reduction of actual temperature vegetable organisms become less active, less carbonic acid is removed from the atmosphere, and it is wonderful how a small addition to the carbonic acid of the atmosphere increases its power of obstructing the passage of low forms of heat, and so diminishes the planet's radiation. Six per centum of carbonic acid nearly doubles the resistance of the atmosphere to radiation. If, then, the supply of heat from the sun were reduced one-half, the small increase of carbonic acid which would occur in the course of Nature would furnish the complete remedy for the loss, and restore the temperature needed for life. It is easy to see that this phenomenon would be accompanied by a more even and spring-like distribution of temperature over the earth's surface, which seems to accord with arctic geology. It may be, then, that a diminished sun is not an event to be dreaded. It is more probable, however, that the heat of the sun is still on the increase. After a time, it may be ages and ages, the sun will have cooled again, and will grow dim. But even then we shall have as much heat from it as have today the dwellers upon the outer planet of our system; as much light as the animals now have at the bottom of the ocean. We shall still have souls within our bodies and a Father in Heaven. Still further on the ideal history terminates in a total disappearance of all the material light of the present creation, chaos returns, ripe for a new nebular history and a new series of evolutions. But the old spiritual ideality can never be effaced.

Out-Door Exercise for Men and Women.

At the present time there are probably twenty men and more than double that number of women footing it around sawdust rings in different parts of the country. Every village has its walking club. College boys meet you with the precise gait of an ostrich, their elbows out jerking along from the hips down; pretty girls no longer "skim with light elastic tread the daisied dales," but set down their boots scientifically on the bricks heel and toe, good for so many miles an hour.

All this, we are told, is physical culture. Perhaps it is. Any transient whim which will drag young people out of furnace-heated houses into the open air must benefit them physically to a certain degree. A young lad or girl, however, who would take the same amount of exercise while looking for stones, beetles, or woods, or while playing a game, would reap double the advantage from it, as every tyro in physiology knows. The brain must be interested and amused while the limbs are at work, or the nerves suffer just in proportion as the muscles are strengthened. We need not flatter ourselves that we are becoming, as a people, anxious for physical culture. Amateurs are footing it just now, ticking off their miles and boasting of them, because it is the fashion of the hour, just as they are Pinafore. As for the professional walkers, especially the poor women, who are advertising themselves in half the towns of the country, they are doing it simply to keep body and soul together. God help them! Nothing of late years gives a more pitiful insight into the condition of the laboring classes than the rush of women into every employment which promises to give them a living. We know of no more miserable or repugnant way for a modest woman to earn money than that of making herself a rare-show for days to a multitude of gaping and often half-drunken men, whose sole interest in her lies in watching the strength and endurance of her body, while she drags it around the ring through the foul air of breaths laden with tobacco and whisky, in a condition of nervous exhaustion so extreme that death is luminent at any moment. A week or two ago, as our readers know, a strong man was driven mad by the strain, and attempted murder, and last Sunday a poor girl in Newark fell in epileptic fits, and barely escaped with life. If these poor creatures are driven to straits so hard to earn their living, let us pity them and help them if we choose, but in the name of common sense let us not talk of physical culture in the matter.

It is quite true that our women need more out-door exercise. They are, as a rule, bilious, neuralgic and thin-blooded. But it is not their muscles, but their nerves and digestion, which need repair. What they want, therefore, is fresh air, amusement, interest in out-door things, and gentle exercise —not the overwork of long, objectless tramps. Precisely the same rule applies to American men. Their brains need rest and recreation quite as much as their bodies do work. It is true they may gain a good many hints as to the uses of sobriety, self-control in eating, fresh air and clean bodies from those professional trainers. Whisky and tobacco-smoke had much to do with the defeats at Gilmore's Garden. But the advantage of walking does not lie in making so many miles an hour, except to men who mean to earn their living by it. If the college boys whose souls are wrung with envy of Rowell would spend the coming vacation in making pedestrian tours through the mountains, leaving their whisky flasks at home, sleeping on the ground, cooking for themselves, finding new fun and adventures every day, they would come back sounder in general health, and certainly more vigorous in mind and morals than if they had walked for the Astley belt and won it.—N. Y. Tribune.

PACIFIC coast whalers set forth from their winter quarters early in the spring, provisioned for a cruise of at least six months. The crews number about thirty-five men, a force sufficient to man four or five boats. The number of boats carried depends on the locality of the hunting ground and the nature of the whales to be captured. In the extreme north whales never attack a boat, but in the south they do so frequently. The best of the weapons carried is the patent harpoon-gun, which is darted from the hand, and explodes after striking the whale, causing instant death when it enters a vital part.—N. Y. Sun.

Do Opossums "Play 'Possum?"

In order to test this supposed habit of the opossum, I have sought out their hiding-places in several instances, and endeavored to make them "show off" in this manner. In one instance a large male opossum was captured in an ordinary box-trap, set for rabbits. On lifting the lid the animal was found to be curled up into nearly as globular a form as it was possible to assume. Being disturbed, it slowly raised its head, opened its mouth widely, but did not offer to bite, and in this position quietly awaited coming events. After some five minutes of mutual staring, the opossum closed its mouth and slowly restored its head to a more easy position, and even closed one eye, as though the other was all that was necessary to note what might occur. On being roughly handled, and given several pushes with a stick, it opened its mouth widely and protested against disturbance by a low, hissing sound, but did not uncoil its body. If the animal, at this time, realized all the circumstances of its being a prisoner, it certainly did not fear death, for it made no effort to escape, which the fear of death would cause it to do, since it was in no way disabled. After waiting an hour, and seeing no sign of regaining unconsciousness, but, instead, a provoking indifference, I walked off some distance, where I could see the trap, which I left open, but he myself showed no inclination to leave. Fifty minutes elapsed before I saw any movement on the part of the animal, and then it was a very gradual uncoiling of the body, a protracted yawn, a stretching of the limbs, and then standing up, he looked about and very deliberately walked off. I ran toward him, when he quickened his pace, but was soon overtaken. On seizing him by the tail he crouched down, partially coiled his body and spread his jaws to their utmost. When I threatened violent blows about his head (although careful not to strike him), the animal's head slowly sank down, and the eyes closed, but this was the only effect act. The breathing was affected, but not suppressed, the surface temperature of the body perceptibly lowered. I judged, and it was, as I believed, a fainting, not feigning; a temporary paralyzation of the whole body, through fear, and for the time being absolute unconsciousness. Furthermore, as in fainting, a touch of cold water has the power of readily restoring the animal. I have made scores of experiments with opossums when apparently dead, and in no instance have the results varied from the above. As to the position usually assumed when the opossum is supposed to be feigning death, it is that which the animal always assumes when sleeping, and, further, is that best calculation of the laboring classes than the head and breast are partially protected. The opossum is superlatively lazy and positively timid, and is not at all the bold, intelligent, when compared with the raccoon, otter, muskrat or marmot, and I believe the supposed habit of feigning death when captured by man can be attributable to fear and not cunning. Surely, it is a merciful provision that destroys, without pain, all semblance to animals about to be torn in pieces.—Science News.

Poets Laureate.

The poets laureate of England make up a motley and curious literary history. A volume has just been published in London which relates with minuteness and accuracy the history of this office, which for 250 years it has pleased the Kings of England to fill with some duly-appointed poets. Of these laureates there have been fourteen, and the Athenæum points out that three of them have been chosen from the first rank of genius, each the most illustrious poet of his age; that three others were learned and dignified writers of great distinction, while one was a man of some genius, but of very slender intellects and degraded manners. During the careers of Addison, Pope and Dryden the representative of English poetry, for a period of twenty-three years, was one Nahum Tate, who was "Travestied the Psalms, adapted Shakespeare's style from Milton, wrote verses for Purcell," and who, in spite of his association with illustrious men, "did not lose" for a moment his unbecoming vulgarity of mind," or "polish his uncouth and debased style." During another twenty-three years, in which Byron, Coleridge, Scott, Moore, Campbell, Wordsworth and Cowper were enriching literature with their master works, the nominal head of English literature was one Henry James Pye. Henry James Pye was a Captain in the Berks Militia, and a respectable Police Magistrate, but "incapable of stringing four rhymes together without an unpardonable fault of style." There was ridicule heaped upon him from many quarters, but in spite of it he went on "patiently fabricating his New Year odes, and his birthday odes, a pitiful series of forty-six, unheedful and apparently unconscious of the chorus of laughter." Early in the eighteenth century the laureateship fell to the lot of the Rev. Lawrence Eusden, than whom the history of poetry does not present a "figure more epitomizedly mean, more ridiculously obscure." There was not even in his own day a voice to defend "this drunken parson and lord of the laurel." Finally, in 1730, no resigned the outraged laurel and his life "in a bout of drunkenness," and was succeeded by Colley Gibber. William Davenant, who was laureate after Ben Jonson, went into exile during the civil wars, and in 1650 was captured by Parliamentary cruisers at the head of a flotilla bound for Virginia. His life was, however, spared, and he owed it to no less eminent a Republican and poet than Milton. The greatest name with which the office has been identified in England is John Dryden, and his is the only case of the abdication, voluntary or enforced, of an English laureate. Since the time of Pye the office has regained its lost dignity, for Wordsworth, Southey and Tennyson have filled it in succession. It was Shadwell, the successor of Dryden, who inaugurated the anniversary ode on the birthday of the King—a production which was always tedious, and a complete collection of which would prove "the most baffling series of works that was ever presented to a patient reader." Of the fourteen laureates, only five rest in Westminster Abbey, and they are Jonson, Davenant, Dryden, Rowe and Cibber.—N. Y. Tribune.

Geologists, astronomers and physicists alike have hitherto been baffled in their attempts to set up any satisfactory kind of chronometer which will approximately measure geological time, and thus give us some clew to the antiquity of our globe. It is therefore worth noting that Mr. Mallard Reade, of Liverpool, has lately contributed to the Royal Society a very suggestive paper, in which he refers readers to graphs with the question by employing the limestone rocks of the earth's crust as an index of geological time. Limestones have been in course of formation from the earliest known geological periods, but it would appear that the later-formed strata are more calcareous than the earlier, and that there has, in fact, been a gradually progressive increase of calcareous matter. The very extensive deposition of carbonate of lime over wide areas of the ocean-bottom at the present day is sufficiently attested by the recent soundings of the Challenger. According to the author's estimate, the sedimentary crust of the earth is at least one mile in average actual thickness, of which probably one-tenth consists of calcareous matter. In sculpture the origin of this calcareous matter, it is assumed that the primitive rocks of the original crust were of the nature of granitic or basaltic rocks. By the disintegration of such rocks, calcareous and other sedimentary deposits have been formed. The amount of limestone in waters which drain districts made up of granite and basalts is found, by a comparison of analyses, to be on an average about 3.73 parts in 1,000 parts of water. It is further assumed that the exposed areas of igneous rocks, taking an average throughout all geological time, will be about equal to the combined areas of sedimentary rocks, and therefore the present proportion of 3.73 parts in 100

The Township was divided into two road districts, to be divided by Pine River—No. 1 being on the south side, and No. 2 on the north side. A Chamberlain and H. D. Stevens were appointed overseers of Highways of their respective districts.

John Bell was re-appointed pound master.

Sheep and swine are prohibited from running at large any portion of the year, and horses and cattle from December first to April first.

$100 of the two mill tax was ordered to be transferred to the school fund.

One half of one per cent of valuation was voted for highway purposes, and one per cent for contingent expenses.

$125 was ordered to be placed at the disposal of the Highway Commissioner for the purpose of bending and lighting the bridge the coming season.

A Plucky Little Indian Boy.

From the Chicago Tribune.

A house belonging to Capt. Bennett, of Mackinac, situated on the north shore, near the Schmann, was burned last week Wednesday night. The house was used during the summer in Capt. Bennett's extensive fish business, and his "plant" was largely stored there during the winter. To guard against fire and thieves an Indian was employed to live in the house. In the early part of the week this Indian went to Mackinac, leaving his family at home. He started back Wednesday, going as far as his father-in-law's, which is about four miles from the warehouse. Here he found his wife. She had locked her three children, the oldest a boy of 5 years, in the house. The Indian and his wife remained at her father's all night and during the next day. The house got on fire Wednesday night. The little boy not being able to get out of the doors, and the windows being securely fastened, was only able to escape by taking an ax, which fortunately had been left in the house, and chopping his way out of a window. He then took the young children out. They remained about the house until morning, wrapping their feet up in blankets to keep from freezing. They waited until noon the next day for the parents to come, and not doing so the little fellow put the two smaller ones on a hand sled and hauled them down to their grandfather's. Capt. Bennett's loss on building and contents will aggregate about $5000.

I regrees were conferred by President Angell at the University last week upon 199 Lawyers, 106 Doctors, and 13 Dental Surgeons.

When the Democrats retake some more votes in Congress, there are a number of Republican Congressmen who will be defeated for re-election. Their successors will be Democrats and not Greenbackers without the attached regard for law or equity.

The name of Rev. Marcus Lane of Pilot, is mentioned in connection with the Bishopric made vacant by the resignation of Bishop McCoskry.

A bill has passed the Senate of Iowa requiring a dispenser of drugs to be a registered pharmacist and a graduate of a school of pharmacy

Hine of the Lowell Journal believes that the Democrats and Greenbackers will use the same tooth brush in 1880 for they have already commenced to chew each other's gum.

Ex-Congressman Hewitt, of New York, is dying for want of sleep. Sleeplessness is his disease. He owns whole rows of houses, as he says, but refreshing sleep refuses to come to his eyes.

The Washington special of the Chicago Times, of March 23, says: "If every time the Senate Democratic majority attempts to make a move it finds in the way such a belligerent and pugnacious minority as was displayed this afternoon, the tendency will be to produce discouragement. The Senate Republicans are in the minority so far as brains are concerned, and that side will be very apt to give the more numerous side plenty of trouble as the session goes"

The Death-Rate of.

Our country is getting to be fearfully alarming, the average of little ones removed every year, without any reasonable cause, death resulting generally from the most insignificant origin. At this season of the year especially, a cold is such a common thing that in the hurry of every day life we are apt to overlook the dangers attending it and often find too late, that a Fever or Lung trouble has already set in. Thousands have their lives in this way every winter, while but Boschee's German Syrup been taken, a cure would have resulted and a large bill a Doctor been avoided. For all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, Boschee's German Syrup has proven itself to be the greatest discovery of the kind in medicine. Every Druggist in this country will tell you of its wonderful effect. Over 950,000 bottles sold last year without a single failure known.

ELECTION NOTICE!

STATE OF MICHIGAN } ss.
County of Cheboygan }

Shentiff's Office, Charlevoix, Mich. Feb., 25, 1879.

To the Electors of Charlevoix County:

You are hereby notified that in accordance with resolutions adopted by the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Charlevoix County at their annual meeting in October, 1878, and at their adjourned meeting in January, 1879. The undersigned gives notice that on the first Tuesday in April, being the first day of April, A. D. 1879, at which election the following officers are to be elected, viz: One Sheriff, one County Clerk, one County Treasurer, one Register of Deeds, one Prosecuting Attorney, one Circuit Court Commissioner, one County Surveyor, one Coroner, and three Supervisors, one for the township of Charlevoix, one for the township of Wilson, and one for the township of Marion, and also to vote upon the question of raising the sum of Two Thousand Dollars for the purpose of building a bridge across Pine River, at the village of Charlevoix

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—The eighth annual meeting of the Women's Presbyterian Board of Missions of the Northwest will be held in Toledo, April 25 and 24.

—The Rev. J. L. Wyatt, who has lately returned from Tunnevelly, India, reports that 18,000 Hindoos have joined the Christian Church within the last year.

—One the Chicago Reeters of the Reformed Episcopal Church announces that henceforth Sunday evening sermons will be finished in twenty minutes.

—The statistics of the Baptist Year Book for 1878 show that the average contribution of American Baptists to all religious work amounts for the year to less than twenty-five cents a member.

—Teach one thing at a time. Teach that thing well. Teach its connections, as far as possible, with all other things. Teach that it is better to know everything of something, than to know something of everything.—Davis' Logic of Mathematics.

—In 1818, thirteen men gathered together, thirteen prayers were said, and thirteen dollars subscribed for the establishment of a place of learning for Baptists. Today Madison University, at Clinton, N. Y., owns all its buildings and life notes of land in a beautiful part of the country. It has a fine library, no debts and more than $400,000 drawing interest.

—Prince Nicholas, of Montenegro, in response to a letter from the Archbishop of Scutari and Antivari asking congratulations of the Roman Catholic Church, writes that the "history of Montenegro is made up of one unbroken and difficult, but successful, struggle for the free exercise of the Christian religion. My Roman Catholic subjects will enjoy the full measure of this freedom, and it shall be the continual care and duty of my Government that the Roman Catholics shall in nothing and never be distinguished from their orthodox fellow-citizens, but shall enjoy all the advantages of the State and my sovereign love, which is the same for all."

—A schism has sprung up in the Greek Orthodox Church which promises to be serious. The Greek Government, after allowing it to exist undisturbed for the last five years, has sent officers to take the children from its schools and to close its churches, while all the clergy who have joined the movement have been ordered to retire to a monastery, where they will be subjected to severe penance. The leader of this new party is one Makrakis, who preaches about "restored Christendom," and proposes a reform within the existing Church which will restore the confidence that prevailed from the first to the third centuries of the Christian era.

—The German language is now taught in fifty-six public schools of New York City. There were ninety-eight classes examined during the year, of which number eighty-six were reported to have excellent instruction, nine good and three fair. Ten schools give instruction in French, and of the fifteen that were thirteen had good instruction and the other two excellent. A large majority of the pupils in almost every class in these languages read and translate the foreign text in the text-book correctly. Great improvement was made last year in the written translations from English into the foreign languages which pupils are generally asked to make in the presence of the examiner.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—A few years ago the Czar sent the Emir of Afghanistan a quantity of lightning-rods, and the Afghans put up the glittering poinis on their houses, without connecting them with the ground. The effect was notfavorable to Russian popularity.

—A recent number of La Nature describes a simple and convenient night lamp, the invention of M. Bobin, indicating the hour by the extent of combustion of oil. During the night one can see at what height the oil stands in the tube and read the corresponding hour.

—Now it is reported that the swinging motion of railway cars is utilized to record the velocity of the trains. The apparatus is described as a case in which is fixed clock-work, "which causes a large horizontal plate to rotate once in twelve hours. On the plate a disk of paper is held by a spring, the border being divided by hours and minutes. The point of a pencil is attached to two springs and a pendulum, so that the pencil makes a zigzag line around the paper; on removing the latter the rate of traveling may be studied.

—Intelligence has been received from India of an important geographical discovery. The source of the Sanpu, or great river of Tibet, has been surveyed by one of the native explorers attached to the Indian Survey for a distance of 270 miles east and of Chetang, the furthest point to which it had hitherto been traced in that direction. It then turned southward into some hills which the explorer was unable to penetrate. This settles a vexata quæstio which has long exercised the minds of geographers as to the identity of the Sanpu and the Brahmaputra.

—As an agent for rapidly extinguishing fires in chimneys, a French chemist recommends the burning of a few pounds of "carbon-di-sulphide" on the hearth. The combustion of this substance produces large volumes of carbonic and sulphurous-acid gases, both of which are effectual extinguishers of flame. The compound is said to have been experimentally tried by the Paris firemen and with good results, since it is stated that within the space of three months they succeeded by its use in extinguishing 251 fires out of 819, and that without deranging or damaging apartments in any way.

—Prof. Siatba has devised and made public a process of nickel-plating in the wet way, without the use of the battery, which is said to give good results, and which is not patented. The process is described as follows: To a dilute solution of chloride of zinc (5 to 10 per cent.) enough nickel sulphate is to be added to impart a decidedly green color to it, and the solution is then to be heated to boiling in a porcelain vessel. The clouding of the liquid from the separation of a basic zinc salt need not be heeded, as it will not interfere with the effectiveness of the bath. The articles to be nickel-coated—first carefully cleaned of oxide or grease—are to be suspended in the solution from thirty to sixty minutes, the bath being kept at a boiling temperature. When the articles are observed to be uniformly coated, they may be removed, washed in water in which a little chalk is suspended, dried and finally polished with chalk or other suitable material. By the substitution of a cobalt salt in the place of the nickel, objects may be similarly coated with cobalt.

London.

From the computations of authorities, it appears that London (with all its suburbs) covers within the fifteen miles radius of Charing Cross nearly seven hundred square miles. It numbers within these boundaries over four millions of inhabitants. It contains more country-born persons than the Counties of Devon and Gloucestercombined, or 37 per cent. of its entire population. Every four minutes a birth takes place in the metropolis, and every six minutes a death. Within the circle already named there are added to the population 205 persons every day, and 75,000 annually. London has 7,000 miles of streets, and on an average twenty-eight miles of new streets are opened, and 9,000 new houses built, every year. One thousand vessels and 9,000 sailors are in its port every day. Its crime is also in proportion to its extent. Seventy-three thousand persons are annually taken into custody by the police, and one-third of all the crime of the country is committed within its borders. Thirty-eight thousand persons are annually committed for drunkenness by its Magistrates. The metropolis comprises considerably upward of one hundred thousand foreigners from every quarter of the globe. It contains more Roman Catholics than Rome, itself, more Jews than the whole of Palestine, more Irish than Belfast, more Scotchmen than Aberdeen, and more Welshmen than Cardiff. Its beershops and gin palaces are so numerous that their frontages if placed side by side, would stretch from Charing Cross to Chichester, a distance of sixty-two miles. If all the dwellings in London could thus have their frontages side by side, they would extend beyond the Land's End. Education has enough papers to occupy every house in Brighton. The society which advocates the cessation of Sunday labor will be astonished to learn that sixty miles of shops are open every Sunday. With regard to churches and chapels, the Bishop of London, examined before a committee of the House of Lords in the year 1840, said: "If you proceed a mile or two eastward of St. Paul's you will find yourself in the midst of a population the most wretched and destitute of mankind, consisting of artificers, laborers, beggars and thieves, to the amount of 300,000 or 400,000 souls. Throughout this entire quarter there is not more than one church for every 10,000 inhabitants; and in two districts there is but one church for 45,000 souls." In 1839, Lord John Russell stated, in Parliament, that London, with thirty-four parishes and a population of 1,170,000, had church accommodation for only 101,000. These and other statistics furnished led to the "Metropolis Churches Fund," established in 1836, which has been followed by the draining of London's Fund. It is still computed, however, that at least 1,000 new churches and chapels are required in the metropolis.—Cornhill Magazine.

The Fate of a Herd of Buffaloes.

An army officer who recently arrived in Chicago from the Yellowstone Valley tells a story of what happened to a herd of buffaloes as they were migrating southward. The herd numbered 2,500 head, and had been driven out of the Milk River country by the Indian hunters belonging to Sitting Bull's band. When they reached the river they ventured upon the ice with their customary confidence, coming upon it with a solid front and beginning the crossing with closed ranks. The stream at this point was very deep. When the front file, which was stretched out a quarter of a mile in length, had nearly gained the opposite shore, the ice suddenly gave way under them. Some trappers who were eyewitnesses of the scene said it seemed as if a trench had been opened in the ice the whole length of the column. Some four or five hundred animals tumbled into the opening all in a heap. Others fell in on top of them and sank out of sight in a twinkling. By this time the rotten ice was breaking under the still-advancing herd. The trappers say that in less than a minute the whole body of buffaloes had been precipitated into the river. They were wedged in so thickly that they could do nothing but struggle for a second and then disappear beneath the cakes of ice of the swift current. Not a beast in that mighty herd tried to escape, but in a solid phalanx they marched to their fatal bath in the "Big Muddy." In a minute from the time the ice broke not a buffalo's head or tail was to be seen.

How the Zulus Fight.

From my intercourse with the Matabeles I know the Zulu style of fighting. Ever since the dreadful tidings I have had constantly before me the vision of that infuriated mass of Zulus, like thousands of savage gorillas, rushing on those devoted men of the Twenty-fourth. Their style is not to be contrasted for a moment with that of the Colonial natives, or those with whom our forces have been engaged in Griqualand West, or in the Transvaal. The Zulus prefer, and strive, to throw themselves in overwhelming numbers on the weakest point of the enemy. With dauntless courage and the fury of tigers they rush on, without the least concern for the hundreds falling in their ranks, or the bodies barring their way; they press on to get to close quarters as speedily as possible, looking neither to the left nor right, nor dreaming of hiding for a moment behind stones or bushes. They charge forward, for this reason preferring the open field. Naturally courageous and vain of their prowess, they firmly believe that they need only follow the above-mentioned tactics and they must win the day. As for the loss they suffer in thus advancing in great numbers, they are indifferent to it, for the simple reason that they are so accustomed to wholesale slaughter as one of their daily customs that the sight of their comrades falling in all directions has no effect upon them. Where is there another tribe like the Zulus and their branches in South Africa? These men are ruled by a savage despot. They are trained as soldiers all their lives in regiments, properly officered, and, in fact, in correct military style, as nearly as they can follow it. When ranged in order of battle, each man holds a gun in his right hand, a small shield in a strong round his left arm, and in his left hand he holds a long and short assegai. Their skill with the gun being anything but great, they content themselves by beginning the attack with a couple of volleys. The gun is then thrown down, and they rush upon their opponents in a dense mass, taking the long assegai in the right hand. At about forty to sixty paces they pause in their headlong career, and hundreds and thousands of spears are hurled at the enemy. Then the short assegai is taken in the right hand and the charge is resumed. When within a few yards of the enemy they make one last momentary pause, only to snap the assegai off across the knee of the foe, and then their favorite hand-to-hand conflict ensues. Thus the fight becomes a slaughter, generally ending in the complete success of the Zulus.—Cradock Register.

Remedies Worth Trying.

The Paris correspondent of the Boston Courier, referring to his recovery from a dangerous illness, says: I mention this illness that I may tell you how easily I overcame it. I was not doubtful I could not breathe. My physician ordered me to take a flat-iron and heat it as hot as I could bear; put a sheet of fold of flannel on the gridiron and move the iron to and fro on the flannel. I was cured by enchantment. My doctor told me that some time since a professor in one of our colleges, after suffering some days with neuralgia in the head, which he himself had tried to cure, sent for the former, who prescribed a hot flat-iron. The next time the doctor saw the professor the latter exclaimed with much anger: "I really shall not pay you any fee! what! I had no sooner applied the heated iron to my head than the pain left as if by enchantment! That is as simple as good-by; surely you cannot expect a fee for it!" My physician was summoned next day to the bedside of a woman who had neuralgia in both sides, and so violently, she alarmed the whole neighborhood by screaming with unbearable anguish wrung from her. She was taken from her bed and borne near the fire. In such severe cases a heated iron is not energetic enough. He has an iron rod fastened in an ivory handle. He heats the rod white heat (which causes less pain than red heat) and applies it very slightly to the seat of pain, first in longitudinal, then in latitudinal lines. The application is so light that no trace is left but red lines on the epidermis, which are soon effaced. In twenty minutes the woman walked back to bed and the third day afterward quitted it entirely freed from neuralgia. This instrument is not to be intrusted to awkward hands. Three weeks ago one of our brilliant artists was invited to shoot by the owner of a chateau in the dense grounds there are wild fowl in abundance. He woke, the morning after arrival at this gentleman's house, with sciatics in his right thigh. The nearest doctor was sent for. "I can do nothing which will give you immediate relief." The artist is a patient of my physician. He told the doctor what to do. The latter declined taking the responsibility of any such violent treatment. "But I assume all responsibility." The doctor applied an iron rod heated to white heat, but so awkwardly that the artist has scars the size of a five-franc piece on his thigh. He was nevertheless cured, and enjoyed a week's sport without one other twitch of pain.

Plants Protected by Insects.

Mr. Francis Darwin, in a lecture on "Means of Self-Defense among Plants," delivered at the London Institution, said that one of the most curious forms of defense known is afforded by a recently discovered class of plants, which, being stingless themselves, are protected by stinging ants, which make their home in the plant and defend it against its enemies. Of these the most remarkable is the bull's-horn acacia (described by the late Mr. Belt in his book "The Naturalist in Nicaragua"), a shrubby tree with gigantic curved thorns, from which its name is derived. These horns are hollow and tenanted by ants, which bore a hole in them, and the workers may be seen running about over the green leaves. If a branch is shaken the ants swarm out of the thorns and attack the aggressor with their stings. Their chief service to the plant consists in defending it against leaf-cutting ants, which are the great enemy of all vegetation in that part of America. The latter form large underground nests, and their ceaseless industry in gathering leaves, which they strip to form beds of material, which become covered over with a delicate white fungus, on which the larvæ of the ants are fed. By this literally they are a colony of mushroom growers. The special protection afforded by the stinging ants, which live in the thorns of the acacia is, therefore, to protect the leaves of the shrub from being borne away, and thereby to make mushroom beds. Certain varieties of the orange tree have leaves which are distasteful to the leaf-cutters, this property of the leaves thus forming a means of defense. Other plants are unaccountably spared by them—grass for example, which, if brought to the nest, is at once thrown out by some ant in authority. The bull's-horn acacia, in return for the service rendered by the stinging ants, not only affords them shelter in its thorns, but provides them with nectar secreted by glands at the base of its leaves, and also grows for them small yellow pear-shaped bodies, about one twelfth of an inch in length, at the tip of some of its leaflets, which they use as food. These little yellow bodies are made up of cells containing much protein and fat or oil, and afford the insects an excellent food. When the leaf unfolds, the ants may be seen running from one leaflet to another, to see if these little yellow bodies are ripe; and if they are ready to be gathered they are broken up by the ants and carried away to the nest in the thorn. Several small birds, also, build their nests in the bull's-horn acacia, thus escaping from a predatory ant which is capable of killing young birds. The jumper, a species of plant of South and Central America, is also protected by a standing army of ants; and, like the above-mentioned acacia, grows for its protectors small food bodies containing oil, but instead of secreting nectar it has leaves it has a small insect (coccus), whose sweet secretion is much relished by the ants. Dr. Beccari mentions an epiphytal plant growing on trees in Borneo, the seeds of which germinate, like those of the mistletoe, on the branches of the tree; and the seedling stem, crowned by the cotyledons, grows to about an inch in length, remaining in that condition until a certain number of ant bites a hole in the stem, which then produces a gall-like growth that ultimately constitutes the home of the ants. If the plant is not sufficiently enough to be bitten by an ant it dies. Those ants, then, protect their plant home by removing not only parasites, and the ants are preserved the sessile white flowers which, in this plant, are developed on the tuber like body.—Scientific American.

The Troubles of the Farmer.

Dear, patient, good-natured, grumbling agriculturist. Where the farmer gets his good nature from is a mystery to me every time I look at him. I watched him to-day from the car window, plodding along at the tail of the plow, and I wondered that he ever smiled at all, under any provocation. Of all men, it seems to me the farmer has the best right to grumble. Only, he never grumbles at the right things. He grumbles at prices, and then of course nobody sympathizes with him nor cares a cent for his troubles, because we grumble at the same thing. Prices never did suit anybody. The seller always thinks they are too low, and the buyer always knows they are too high. The merchant goes into bankruptcy because he is compelled to sell his goods for half what they cost him; and the customer goes naked and starves because he can't afford to pay one-half what is asked for them. So the farmer, when he grumbles at prices, is no worse off than the rest of us, and accordingly attracts no sympathy.

But here is where, to my way of thinking, the gazelle comes in for the farmer.

It is spring, and the annual warfare begins. Early in the morning the jocund farmer hies him to the field, and hunts around in the dead weeds and grass for the plow he left out there one where some time last fall. When he finds it, he takes it to the shop to have it mended. When it is mended, he goes back into the field with it. Half way down the first furrow he says, he runs the plow fairly into a big live oak root, the handles alternately break a rib on this side of him and jab the breath out of him on the other, and the sturdy root, looking up out of the ground with a pleased smile of recognition, says cheerfully:

"Ah, Mr. Thistlepod, at it again, eh?"

Fifty feet farther on he strikes a stone that doubles up the plow point like a piece of lead, and while the amazed and breathless agriculturist leans, a limp heap of humanity, across the plow, the relic of glacial period remarks, sleepily:

"Ah ha; spring here already? Glad you woke me up."

And then the granger sits down and patiently tries to tie on that plow point with a hickory withe, and while he pursues this fruitless task, the friendly crow swoops down near enough to ask:

"Goin' to put this twenty in corn, this year, Mr. Thistlepod?"

And before he has time to answer the sable bird, a tiny grasshopper, wriggling out of a clod as full of eggs that they can't be counted, shouts briskly:

"Here we are again, Mr. Thistlepod; dinner for 500,000,000,000!"

And then a slow-moving, but very positive potato bug crawls out into the sunlight to see if the frost has fetched the stripes, and says:

"The old-fashioned pasteblow potatoes are the best for soup, but the early rose should be planted for the first market."

Then several new kinds of bugs who have learned to make any record yet, climb over the fence and come up to inquire about the single crops of the neighborhood, and one can get through with them Prof. Tice reads him a circular stating that there won't be a drop of rain from the middle of April to the last of October. This almost stuns him, but he is beginning to feel a little resigned when a dispatch is received from the Department of Agriculture at Washington, saying that all indications point to a summer of unprecedented, almost tropical heat, and long-continued rains and floods, and advising him to plant no root crops at all. While he is trying to find words to express to express his condition a neighbor drops in to tell him that all the peach trees in the country are winter killed, and that the whole section is raging fiercely in the northern part of the township. Then his wife comes out to tell him the dog has been killed in the well, and that the poor man gets to the door yard, his children with much shouting and excitement meet him and tell him there are a couple of colts of the pole demonstration, in the spring house, and another one under the barn. With tears in his eyes he returns to the field, but by that time it has begun to snow so hard he can't see the horses when he stands at the plow. He is discouraged and starts for the house with his team, when he meets a man who bounces him for using a three-horse clevis he made himself, and wrings ten reluctant dollars out of him for it. When he reaches the house the drive-well man is waiting for him, and while he is settling with him a clock peddler comes in, and a sewing-machine man, screaming like the storm, climbs up on the ten-dollar smoke house and fastens sixty-five dollars' worth of chromos to it, and before the poor farmer can get his gun half loaded, the bailiff comes in to tell him that he has been drawn on the jury.

No, I would not, even if I could, be a farmer.

My life is pleasant and independent, but it seems to have its drawbacks.

If I were a farmer I would grumble all the time, and I would be a man who found fault with me for it.—R. J. Burdette, in Burlington Hawk-Eye.

A Sad Scene in Real Life.

Yesterday, in a little frame house on Cornelia street, there was a scene of miserable, grief-stricken desolation that is rarely witnessed in this city. On a bed sat a woman whose face bore marks of sickness, grief and despair. Beside her lay her husband, dead, with a face so worn and trenched by sickness that the most intimate friend might not have recognized it. On a table at the foot of the bed rested a little box of pine, containing the remains of a baby. In the corner of the room was a pine coffin, on which played a little child of the man whose remains were claimed by the death box. Lounging in glee and rapping on the coffin with its little fists, humming incoherently, the little fellow played. La Gazette reporter learned the following from the woman. She spoke with great difficulty, frequently breaking off into a paroxysm of grief passed. The dead man's name is William Foster, and he had for some time previous to his death been employed at Thompson's wagon yard. Eight days ago he was attacked by pneumonia, and gradually sank till the grave received him to receive him. The little child in the black coffin was only twelve years old; the little child playing on the coffin scarcely two years old. Several women gathered around and tried to comfort the widow, but her moans went up and her desolation stared—actually glared, from her eyes. "Oh! my poor husband," she moaned. "He has killed himself trying to support his child, and I to be left a friend in the world!" And she looked at the remains of her former protector as though she would exchange places with him. The city purchased the coffin, and Chief Counts, let it be said to his credit, paid for the shroud.—Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette.

—If horses are troubled with worms, it is due to some neglect in feeding. Improve the digestion and the worms will depart. But give small doses of aloes or any other good vermifuge, not neglecting a plentiful supply of common salt. Horses and other animals are seldom attacked by worms until they have become run down and are poor in flesh.—Exchange.

—If we are to believe one-half of what is claimed by recent inventors of sugar-making machinery, it will not be many years before our corn-fields will yield all the sweets which the people of the United States will need or care to use. It will be well, however, for our farmers to proceed cautiously, and permit sanguine manufacturers to make the sugar while they raise the corn-stalks and sorghum. The new processes of making sugar from cornstalks may turn out to be more profitable than the making of beet-root sugar, which has thus far been a losing business on this side of the Atlantic.—*N. Y. —Goulache a la Carlsbad.—One-quarter pound smoked bacon, chopped fine; one large tablespoonful butter, one small onion, cut fine, roasted in a pot; when very hot stir in two cook-spoonfuls flour, let it brown, not burn; then throw in three pounds lean beef steak, cut in small pieces and freed from skin; cover, simmer until the meat is tender; add half-wineglass ful strong vinegar, salt, pepper and small cup of boiling water (good soup stock is better); cook slowly one-half hour; according to fancy, after one hau put in the water, may be added some raw potatoes, pared and cut hazle-nut size, care being taken that they do not cook apart, which happens very easily.—N. Y. Times.

—Smoked Mutton Hams.—Choose fat young mutton. Rub it thoroughly with a mixture in the proportion of one part of sugar to two of salt, and put half an ounce of saltpeter to a pound of the mixture. Place the meat in a covered vessel and turn and beat it twice a day for three consecutive days. The fourth day wipe the scum from the meat, wash it with cider vinegar and again rub it with the mixture. The day after, beat and turn it; repeat these alternate operations for ten days, being careful to remove the scum before each rubbing and to turn the meat every time. After this it must be smoked for ten days. To be eaten as hams are smoked beef or venison.—Kansas Farmer.

Give the Boys a Chance.

An incident has come under our notice that leads to a short consideration of the above topic. A farmer has two sons, to whom he has given a good education. The boys rather took to farming, and under favorable circumstances would adopt it as their life employment. The father has a good farm, upon which is some incumbrance, and he offers the boys each a good farm if they will remain with him until the estate is free from mortgage. The plan seems a favorable one. The boys have given a good deal of attention to modern methods of farming, and desire to adopt some changes by which to add to the income and more rapidly pay off the debt. These are scouted by the parent and denominated "boys' notions" or "leaves of book-farming." Any suggestions from the boys are given no weight, and they finally settle down to the work as hired men, thinking that the time will soon come when they can work for themselves and pursue their own methods. But at the end of the year there is a very small net balance to pay on the debt—very little more than enough to pay the interest. This is rather discouraging, but crops brought low prices and the hope is that another year will be one of golden promise. During the interval of the winter months when farmers' boys have more time for thought and reading, the young men suggest various special means by which the farm may be made more remunerative—all to no purpose. They are denounced as "idle theories."

A second year rolls around, and a similar result, and the boys begin to contemplate leaving home, starting with nothing and going into some occupation requiring no capital, and using their brains and muscle to develop means to finally purchase their own farms, to be carried on in their own way.

After relating the illustration, perhaps comment is unnecessary; one would think that any man who should see his likeness; thus depicted would see the advisability of a change. There ought not to be many cases of this character in the country, but, unfortunately, they are numerous. The details of the illustration may not apply, but the general method is the same.

There is a great deal of talk about making home pleasant to keep the children in love with the farm, and suggestions without number are made concerning the introduction of books, newspapers, pictures and games into the house; flowers, gardens, trees and pleasant surroundings outside, all to make the children love the homestead, which are very well in their way. But the boys, if they have the germs of business success in them, want something more than this. They want to be trusted, and their opinions and wishes given some weight, and especially so when their training has been such as renders them qualified to judge and to plan. As the boy develops into the man, he is full of vitality and hope and vigor. He thinks he can accomplish a great deal, and is liable to color the results of his plans and methods too highly; but that is the spirit in him, if properly guided, which is at the basis of true progress. The man, who is past his prime and is only suitable for dem-ing over again the experience of all that have gone before. Each generation can largely build upon a foundation prepared by its predecessors, and fortunately in our day there are ample means afforded young men to acquire the benefit of the results of farm practice, so that very soon they can reach out into new and promising fields. It should be the policy of our farmer fathers to stimulate this tendency rather than check it; modify it perhaps by sound advice, but allow it free scope, especially as most new problems and better solution to old ones.

On the other hand, the young men should be very slow to denominate the slower movements of their fathers as "old fogyism." They should profit by the judgment which is the result of rich experience, employing it as a stepping-stone to greater endeavors and richer success.

In any event, we say to our farmer friends—give the boys a chance. The way would then be open for such new opinions is not in persistently giving them no opportunity to test for themselves, and thus the failure of their own plans to give a wider field to the experience of others.—Detroit Free Press.

Spring Bonnets.

Among the new spring bonnets are numberless shapes. The Directoire style will again be worn, only wider than this. They are to be worn over the heat of the sun. It will be trimmed with bouquets of many-colored flowers in the colors of the suit. These flowers are in the most delicate tints. Crape flowers are among the new styles. Some flower bonnets are now made for dress-parade wear. These bonnets form wreaths. One of these is composed of pink jacinthes, with garnet-colored velvet. The velvet strings are also of garnet-colored velvet. Another is of red flowers, with black tulle and lace covering the flowers and forming the front. Another bonnet in this style is in many-colored roses, with white tulle placed over the flowers, like the black tulle of the above-described bonnet. A baby capote, covered with black bretonne lace, is very suitable for demi-saison wear. The puffed bandeau is of old gold-colored velvet. On the left side is a large tea-rose, with dead leaves. The strings are of black satin. A large Directoire shape is of black rice-straw, with very broad brim lined with a deep facing of leghorn. The only trimming consists of a panache of black feathers in front, and large bows of fine silk guipure lace, bordered with fringe. These bows start from either side under the feathers, and are fastened near the cape by a gilt ornament. They are then tied under the chin. The cape forms three large fluted pieces, which are also lined with leghorn. This hat is very becoming, and must literally be seen to be appreciated. Another shape is called the "Merveilleux." It is of black straw, trimmed with a black satin torsade, covering the whole front of the bonnet. In the center is a bunch of black feathers, which falls over the left side of the crown. A violet shape is of beige satin. The brim is lined with a satin puffing, and raised on the left side under a bunch of real roses. Around the crown are bows of beige satin ribbon. The beige plume falls over the hair, and surrounds the roses.—N. Y. Times.

A Wedding Journey.

One of the most significant incidents in the life of William Howitt, the aged Quaker poet and editor, who died a week or two since, is that of his wedding journey. More than fifty years ago, he married a pretty little Quaker girl, and after the ceremony, the young couple, healthy, sweet-tempered and happy, set off to make a tour of England on foot.

They climbed the hills, fished in the streams, loitered along hawthorne lanes. They learned to know each other, face to face with nature. The charm and sunshine of that summer must have thrown its benignant light down the long pathway to the grave which they trod together.

How many American girls would choose to make such a wedding journey? How many of them could do it if they did choose? Native American women, two generations ago, had strong muscles, strong nerves and sound digestive organs.

The amount of manual work and mental labor endured by our pioneer mothers tires a modern woman to read of. How many of the present race of girls in cities are free from neuralgia, back-aches and gastric troubles? One of the leading physicians in the country declared lately that, in his enormous practice, he had known but two thoroughly healthy girls.

Now what is the cause of this sudden and terrible declension in vitality? Our climate, no doubt, is at the bottom of the evil. It assuredly promotes all nervous diseases.

Next to that is the strained, feverish life which our girls lead in school and in society. An English girl is kept in the nursery until her schooling is over. An American, too often, has her flirtations, balls and beaux, at thirteen. By the time she is ready to take her place as a woman, she is blase, and exhausted in mind and body. The use of anodynes, chloral, etc., to restore her "nerves," is becoming frightfully common.

The plump, healthy Quaker girl, who wandered on foot over England on her wedding journey, had led a simple, quiet home life. She knew as little of anodynes as of bails.—Youth's Companion.

—Investigations made by Prof. Levi Stockbridge, of Amherst (Mass.) Agricultural College, upon the comparative temperature of soil and air and the deposition of dew upon the earth and plants, have led him to adopt a new theory in regard to the formation of dew, namely, that as regards objects in the immediate neighborhood of the earth, at least, dew is the result of condensation by the air of warm vapor rising from the soil. The basis of the theory is the alleged discovery that in summer the average temperature of the earth at night is greater than that of the atmosphere.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—The eighth annual meeting of the Women's Presbyterian Board of Missions of the Northwest will be held in Toledo, April 23 and 24.

—The Rev. J. L. Wyatt, who has lately returned from Thaiveelly, India, reports that 18,000 Hindoos have joined the Christian Church within the last year.

—One the Chicago Rectors of the Reformed Episcopal Church announces that henceforth Sunday evening sermons will be finished in twenty minutes.

—The statistics of the Baptist Year Book for 1878 show that the average contribution of American Baptists to all religious work amounts for the year to less than twenty-five cents a member.

—Teach one thing at a time. Teach that thing well. Teach its connections, as far as possible, with all other things. Teach that it is better to know everything of something, than to know something of everything.—Davis' Logic of Mathematics.

—In 1818, thirteen men gathered together, thirteen prayers were said, and thirteen dollars subscribed for the establishment of a place of learning for Baptists. To-day Madison University, at Clinton, N. Y., owns all its buildings and 150 acres of land in a beautiful part of the country, it has a fine library, no debts and more than $400,000 drawing interest.

—Prince Nicholas, of Montenegro, in response to a letter from the Archbishop of Scutari and Antivari asking recognition of the Roman Catholic Church, writes that the "history of Montenegro is made up of one unbroken and difficult, but successful, struggle for the free exercise of the Christian religion. My Roman Catholic subjects will enjoy the full measure of this freedom, and it shall be the continual care and duty of my Government that the Roman Catholics shall in nothing and never be distinguished from their orthodox fellow-citizens, but shall enjoy all the advantages of the State and my sovereign love, which is the same for all."

—A schism has sprung up in the Greek Orthodox Church which promises to be serious. The Greek Government, after allowing it to exist undisturbed for the last five years, has sent officers to take the children from its schools and to close the churches, while all the clergy who have joined the movement have been ordered to retire to a monastery, where they will be subjected to severe penance. The leader of this new party is one Makrakis, who preaches about "restored Christendom," and proposes a reform within the existing Church which shall restore the conditions that prevailed from the first to the third centuries of the Christian era.

—The German language is now taught in fifty-six public schools of New York City. There were ninety-eight classes examined during the year, of which number eighty-six were reported to have excellent instruction, nine good and three fair. Ten schools give instruction in French, and of the fifteen classes thirteen had good instruction and the other two $12,600$ A large majority of pupils in almost every class in these languages read and translate the foreign text in the text-book correctly. Great improvement was made last year in the written translations from English into the foreign languages which pupils are generally asked to make in the presence of the examiner.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—A few years ago the Czar sent the Emir of Afghanistan a quantity of lightning-rods, and the Afghans put up the gilded points on their houses, without connecting them with the ground. The effect was not favorable to Russian popularity.

—A recent number of La Nature describes a simple and convenient night lamp, the invention of M. Behn, indicating the hour by the extent of combustion of the oil. During the night one can see at what height the oil stands in the tube and read the corresponding hour.

—Now it is reported that the swinging motion of railway cars is utilized to record the velocity of the trains. The apparatus is described as a case in which is fixed clock-work, "which causes a large horizontal plate to rotate once in twelve hours. On the plate a disk of paper is held by a spring, the border being divided by hours and minutes. The point of a pencil is attached to two springs and a pendulum, so that the pencil makes a zigzag line around the paper; on removing the latter the rate of traveling may be studied."

—Intelligence has been received from India of an important geographical discovery. The central Sie Sangpo, or great river of Tibet, has been surveyed by one of the native explorers attached to the Indian Survey for a distance of 200 miles eastward of Chetang, the furthest point to which it had hitherto been traced in that direction. It then turned southward into some hills which the explorer was unable to penetrate. This settles a vexata quæstio which has long exercised the minds of geographers as to the identity of the Sanpo and the Brahmaputra.

—As an agent for rapidly extinguishing fires in chimneys, a French chemist recommends the burning of a few pounds of "carbon-de-sulphide" on the hearth. The combustion of this substance produces large volumes of carbonic and sulphurous-acid gases, both of which are effectual extinguishers of flame. The compound is said to have been experimentally tried by the Paris firemen and with good results, since it is stated that within the space of three months they succeeded by its use in extinguishing 231 fires out of 319, and that without deranging or damaging apartments in any way.

—Prof. Szabo has devised and made public a process of nickel-plating in the wet way, without the use of the battery, which is said to give good results, and which is not patented. The process is described as follows: To a dilute solution of chloride of zinc (5 to 10 per cent.) enough nickel sulphate is to be added to impart a decidedly green color to it, and the solution is then to be heated to boiling in a porcelain vessel. The clouding of the liquid from the separation of a basic zinc salt need not be heeded, as it will not interfere with the effectiveness of the bath. The articles to be nickel-coated—first carefully cleaned of oxide or grease—are to be suspended in the solution from thirty to sixty minutes, the bath being kept at a boiling temperature. When the articles are observed to be uniformly coated, they may be removed, washed in water in which a little chalk is suspended, dried and finally polished with chalk or Zaluc. Zaluc is a material by the substitution of a cobalt salt in the place of the nickel, objects may be similarly coated with cobalt.

London.

From the computations of authorities, it appears that London (with all its suburbs) covers within the fifteen miles radius of Charing Cross nearly seven hundred square miles. It numbers within these boundaries over four millions of inhabitants. It contains more country-born persons than the Counties of Devon and Gloucestershire combined, or 37 per cent. of its entire population. Every four minutes a birth takes place in the metropolis, and every six minutes a death. Within the circle are included every fifth person affected, all, in fact, in correct military style, as nearly as they can follow it. When ranged in order of battle, each man holds a gun in his right hand, a small shield is strung round his left arm, and in his left hand he holds a long and short assegai. Their skill with the gun being anything but great, they content themselves with closing the attack with a couple of volleys. The gun is then thrown down, and they rush upon their opponents in dense mass, taking the long assegai in the right hand. At about forty to sixty paces they pause in their headlong career, and clouds of assegais thousands of spears are hurled at the enemy. Then the short assegai is taken in the right hand, and the charge is resumed. When within a few yards of the enemy they make one last momentary pause, only to snap the assegai short off across the left knee, and then their favorite hand-to-hand conflict ensues. Thus the fight becomes a slaughter, generally ending in the complete success of the Zulus.—Cradock Register.

Remedies Worth Trying.

The Paris correspondent of the Boston Courier, referring to his recovery from a dangerous illness, says: I mention this illness that I may tell you how easily I was cured. I was not doubled. I could not breathe. My physician ordered me to take a flat-iron and heat it red hot as I could bear; and a double fold of flannel on the painful part and move the iron to and from the flannel. I was cured by enchantment. My doctor told me that more than since a professor in one of our colleges, after suffering some days with neuralgia in the head, which he himself had tried to cure, sent for the former, who prescribed a hot flat-iron. The next time the doctor saw the professor the latter exclaimed with mock anger: "I really shall not pay you any fee! what! I had no sooner applied the heated iron to my head than instantly all pain vanished! That is as simple as good-day; surely you cannot expect a fee for it!" My physician was summoned recently to the bedside of a woman who had neuralgia in both sides, and so violently, she informed me, that the neighborhood by the screams which her intolerable anguish wrung from her. She was taken from her bed and borne near the fire. In such severe cases a heated iron is not energetic enough. He has an iron rod fastened in an ivory handle. He heats this rod to white heat (which causes less pain than red heat) and applies it very slightly to the seat of pain, first in longitudinal, then in latitudinal lines. The application is so light that no trace is left but red lines on the epidermis, which are soon effaced. In twenty minutes the woman walked back to bed and the third day afterward quitted it entirely freed from neuralgia. This instrument is not to be intrusted to awkward hands. Three weeks ago one of our brilliant artists was suffering with neuralgia at a chateau in whose grounds there are wild fowl in abundance. He woke, the morning after arriving at this genial man's house, with sciatica in his right thigh. The nearest doctor was sent for. "I can do nothing which will give you immediate relief." The artist is a patient of m, physician. He told the doctor what to do. The latter declined, taking the responsibility of any such violent treatment. "But I assume all responsibility." The doctor supplied an iron rod heated to white heat, but so awkwardly that the artist has scars the size of a five-franc piece on his thigh. He was nevertheless cured, and enjoyed a week's sport without one other twitch of pain.

Finals Projected by Insects.

Mr. Francis Darwin, in a lecture on "Means of Self-Defense among Plants," delivered at the London Institution, said that one of the most conspicuous forms of defense known is afforded by a recently discovered class of plants, which, being stinging themselves, are protected by stinging ants, which make their home in the plant and defend it against its enemies. Of these the most remarkable is the bull's-horn acacia (described by the late Mr. Bell in his book "The Naturalist in Nicaragua"). a shrubby tree with gigantic curved thorns, from which its name is derived. These horns are hollow and tenanted by ants, which bore a hole in them, and the workers may be seen running about over the green leaves. If a branch is shaken the ants swarm out of the thorns and attack the aggressor with their stings. Their chief service to the plant consists in defending it against leaf-cutting ants, which are the great enemy of all vegetation in that part of America. The latter form large underground nests, and their work of destruction consists in gathering leaves which they strip to form heaps of material, which become covered over with a delicate white fungus, on which they feed; but the ants will not touch it, so that literally they are a colony of mushroom growers. The special prowess of the little stinging ants, which live in the thorns of the acacia is, therefore, to protect the leaves of the shrub from being used by the leaf-cutters to make mushrooms for the use of the communities of the orange tree have leaves which are distasteful to the leaf-cutters, and the property of the leaves thus forming a means of defense. Other plants are unaccountably spared by them—grass, for example, which, if brought to the nest, is at once thrown out by some ant in authority. The bull's-horn acacia, in return for the service rendered by the stinging ants, not only affords them shelter in its thorns, but provides them with nectar secreted by glands at the base of its leaves, and also grows for them small yellow pear-shaped bodies, about one-twelfth of an inch in length, at the tip of some of the leaflets which they use as food. These little yellow bodies are made up of cells containing protoplasm rich in fat, and albumen, in the exact proportion found in human food. When the leaf unfolds, the ants may be seen running from one leaflet to another, to see if these little pears or bodies are ripe; and if they are ready to be gathered they are broken up by the ants and carried away to the nest in

WILLARD A. SMITH,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, APR. 8, - - - 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, April 7, 1879

EDITOR SENTINEL.

Nothing exercises greater fascination over the boyish mind than the love of travel. A tendency toward roaming, the desire to feel and see the strangeness of far countries, is one of the unborn human instincts which is probably never entirely lost, but which in youth reaches such a climax of intensity that Gulliver and Robinson Crusoe have become immortal. Like the great force of nature this instinct is a bad master, but like them also it can be a most excellent servant, and an enterprising American has just now, after over two years of almost unremitting labor, completed a harness by which it is going to be made to draw the triumphal car of Education.

I presume that most of your readers have heard something, especially within the last six months, about the Woodruff scientific expedition around the world; and I feel sure that all of them will be interested now that the preparatory stage of this magnificent scheme is drawing to a close, to learn a few particulars regarding one of the most novel and noble undertakings of the century, the full story of which would read like one of Jules Verne's wildest and most fascinating fictions.

Nearly ten years ago Mr. James O Woodruff, a young citizen of Auburn, New York, conceived the bold idea of organizing and dispatching an educational expedition around the world. But the obstacles in the way of anything so untried were naturally numerous, and the idea was apparently dropped. Only apparently, however. Mr. Woodruff kept the subject in mind, satisfied himself of the feasibility of the plan, gradually worked out its details, and finally in the Fall of 1877 set himself vigorously to the task of putting it into practical effect.

The first step was to provide a suitable vessel, and right here lay the greatest single difficulty of the whole enterprise. Our protective shipping laws refuse an American register to foreign built vessels; but in this case an American register must be had and the price of an American built steamer of the class desired would have been ruinous. So Mr. W. proceeded to Washington and spent many months in urging Congress to pass an act in his favor, allowing him to go abroad for his boat and giving it all American privileges. He was finally successful. The desired act was passed with the proviso that the vessel should be used solely for scientific purposes, and that she should pass a critical government inspection as to her seaworthiness and general fitness for the work before her. Fortified with this preliminary victory, Mr. Woodruff went at once to Europe and soon returned with the large new iron Clyde built steamer General Warder, which being promptly approved by the government inspectors, was at once purchased by Mr. Woodruff for $250,000 (which sum, large as it is, is only about one-half what a corresponding American vessel would have cost), and the great central necessity of the voyage was secured.

The general plan and purpose of the Woodruff Expedition have been so much in the most prominent newspapers of the country of late that they are, perhaps, already familiar to your readers. I will venture, however, to restate them briefly, mainly in extracts from the very comprehensive prospectus which has been issued by the management.

"This is a voyage around the world, to be performed in sixteen months, and to be devoted to the education of youth and the instruction of tourists. For the students the expedition will constitute a floating college, in which the usual course of instruction will be supplemented by object teaching on a grander scale than has ever before been attempted, while to the tourist it offers every possible advantage for sight seeing. The whole plan and purpose of the expedition is educational. It undertakes to teach the most important and useful branches of a liberal education, and turn out a well rounded student, developed mentally, morally and physically.

"There is, nowhere, nothing in the plan of the Expedition to interfere with the purpose of the tourist who wishes to see the world for his own pleasure. No voyage that could be projected would better suit the convenience of the sightseer, or enable him to make the tour of the world most comfortably and inexpensively."

The proposed route of the expedition is a delightful and comprehensive one, so arranged that each country will be visited in its pleasantest season. The first stop after leaving New York will be made at the Azores islands in mid ocean. Then will be taken in regular succession the principal ports of Ireland, England and Scotland. Then will follow a trip up the Baltic, visiting Stockholm, St. Petersburg and Copenhagen. From the latter city the principal points touched will be Hamburg, Havre and Paris, Lisbon, Gibraltar and all the Mediterranean cities (including Constantinople and Joppa). Suez, Aden and the large ports of India and the tropical islands. Next the seaports of China and Japan will receive special attention, and then the General Warder will set out on the homeward voyage, stopping only at the Sandwich Islands and finally within the Golden Gate at San Francisco. From here a specially chartered train will bring the voyagers back to New York, somewhere about September, 1880, after sixteen months of travel and adventure, which, I venture to predict, will always be recognized by each participant to have been the most interesting, enjoyable and useful period of that duration in his life. The above gives merely the skeleton of the trip, which will be filled out by brief inland excursions from many of the points above enumerated.

The privileges of the Expedition are open both to students and tourists. For the former a sort of collegiate course will be prepared, and will be superintended by an able faculty of ten or twelve competent professors, under the presidency of W. S. Clark, LL. D., President of the Massachusetts State Agricultural College.

The cost of the trip is uniform to students and tourists, and has been fixed at $2,500 for the whole time. The expedition is neither a money-making speculation nor a visionary philanthropic scheme, and it is calculated that the sum named will simply cover the cost and make the enterprise self-sustaining, supposing the minimum number of members (200) to be enrolled. Expenses, while away from the ship will be extra, and they can be more large or small according to the depth of each individual's pocket. Drexel, Morgan & Co., bankers, of this city, are the treasurers of the Expedition, and will have the handling of all moneys paid in on its account, a fact which guarantees the genuineness and entire responsibility of the enterprise. The projector of the expedition, Mr. Woodruff, is its sole director. His office, together with that of Mr. Arthur A. Proal whom he has associated with him as business manager, is at the St. Nicholas Hotel in this city, where full particulars may be obtained and places secured up to the sailing of the General Warder, which is now fixed for the 8th of May.

Meanwhile, that superb steamship lies at her wharf over in Hoboken, open to public inspection, and is daily visited by large numbers of people. The boat is 280 feet long, 40 feet beam, 3,000 tons burden, brig-rigged, with compound engines of the latest type, and duplicates of all machinery, screw, etc., liable to accidents. It is provided with spacious accommodations, the best ventilation, a full complement of boats, and every modern appliance for health, safety and comfort. The main saloon is very large. Its walls are of bird's eye maple and some darker shaded wood. It is hung with pictures, and its furniture, carpets and appointments are all new and tasteful. Of the steerage will be made a handsome dining hall. This plan will leave the main cabin and saloon for a parlor, where the constant interruption of spreading and clearing tables will not occur. The second, or forward cabin is to be used as the lecture or recitation room.

It makes one hopelessly envious to look over the Warder, to hear the eye of her Captain, and to reflect on the fascinating experiences in store for her company, especially if, as in the writer's case, it is impossible to form one of it. Meanwhile, I am the chance of a lifetime which is offered in this Expedition, and if it were in any manner possible for me to avail myself of it, you would, for a year and a half to come, receive no more communications from RADIX.

President Hayes' war horse, the hero of thirty battles, died a few days ago at Fremont, O. He was called "Old Whitey," and was 29 years old. He has ever received the best of care, and was buried with honors on the President's grounds in Fremont beside "Old Ned," another favorite family horse.

The exodus of colored people from the South is becoming a factor in politics. It is suggested only a few Negro votes are needed to make doubtful Northern States vote Republican, and thus confront a solid South with a solid North.

Governor Fremont is enthusiastic concerning the Territory of Arizona. He talks of its wonderful mineral wealth, its rich soil, its timber, its excellent grazing regions and its delightful climate.

While Michigan has reduced the flash test of Kerosene oil to 140 degrees, and the consumers not satisfied because it was not further reduced, Boston people are making an effort to have it raised to 135 degrees.

The city of Fort Huron, this State, under Republican management, reduced her debt $18,000 last year.

Why Will You

Allow a cold to advance in your system and thus encourage more serious maladies, such as Pneumonia. Hemorrhages and Lung troubles when an immediate relief can be so readily afforded Boschee's German Syrup has gained the largest sale in the world for the cure of Coughs, Colds and the severer Lung Diseases. It is Dr. Boschee's famous German prescription, and is prepared with the greatest care, and no household should be entirely without it. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

A DISPATCH of the 31st ult. says that experiments made in one of the New York daily newspaper composing-rooms had demonstrated the inadaptability of the electric light for type-setting.

GEN. CROOK held a formal council with the band of Ponca Indians at Omaha, on the 31st ult., in the presence of several officers and the Indians. "Standing Bear" and "Buffalo Chips" made very pathetic speeches, getting forth the wrongs which they had suffered and detailing the hardships, sickness and death which their tribe had encountered in the Indian Territory to which they had been driven by the encroachments of the whites. They then they must submit to the command to return to the Indian country, but protested all the same, predicting that many of their number would die by the way, and asking for money to pay the necessary expenses to be incurred in taking care of the sick and dead on the journey. Gen. Crook told them that all he could do was to give them rations on the way down. They would be permitted to take all their stock, and could go slowly. It was a disagreeable duty to send them back, but he must obey the orders which he had received from Washington. They had all the facts in Washington relating to the case, and it would do no good for him to interpose.

DURING the month of March there was forty failures in New York City, with an aggregate of liabilities of $480,449, and of arrests of $911,756. During March, 1878, the failures numbered eighty-five, with an aggregate liability of $6,480,000.

ACCORDING to Yankton dispatches of the 31st ult., the southern portion of Dakota was being devastated by prairie fires. A great number of houses and a vast quantity of hay, corn and wheat had been destroyed. A Mrs. Drossack and son, in trying to save their property, were caught in the flames and burned to a crisp.

THE public-debt statement, issued on the 1st, shows the following: Total debt (including interest of $25,091,360), $2,447,887,-203. Cash in Treasury, $26,276,456. Debt less cash in Treasury, $2,027,190,203. Increase during March, $992,724. Decrease since June 30, 1878, $8,606,375.

THE total coinage of the United States Mints for March was $5,577,080. The total coinage of standard silver dollars to April 1, 1879, was $28,774,000.

A NUMBER of prominent colored men of St. Louis issued an appeal, on the 31, to all generous and charitable people throughout the country for means to assist the colored refugees from the South who were daily arriving in that city, fleeing from the South to seek homes in the free West. The colored people of St. Louis had not encouraged them to come, nor had transportation companies offered them any inducements to emigrate, but the movement was made in the hopes of bettering their condition. Many of them were very destitute on reaching St. Louis, and its great need of charitable help. Contributions may be sent to Rev. Moses Dickson, 1211 Morgan-st.; Rev. John Turner, 1310 Morgan-st.; Rev. S. P. Anderson, Eighth-street Baptist Church; Rev. Allen Allen, Lawton, 1015 Christy avenue; J. Milton Turner, ex-United States Minister to Liberia, 2013 North Tenth st.

BETWEEN the 31st of March and the 3d of April, over three feet of snow fell at North Troy, Vt.

A RUNNING match of twenty miles without a rest, for a purse of $500, with six entries, including an Indian, was extensively advertised to come off in Gilmore's Garden, New York, on the 3d. The Indian turned out to be an Irish man, with paint on his face. He collapsed after the seventh mile. A man named Norman Taylor, of Vermont, won in two hours, twelve minutes and thirty-six seconds. It is reported that spectators mainly gathered to see the Indian.

ALL preparations for the hanging of John P. Phair, at Windsor, Vt., on the 4th, had been completed, when a dispatch was received from Gov. Proctor, announcing a reprieve for six days.

On the 4th, the subscriptions to the 4-per-cent bonds aggregated the sum of $59,502,700, the greater portion being from New York National Banks. The Secretary of the Treasury issued a call for the balance of the 5-20 bonds of 1867, and it was stated that he would, on the 5th, issue a call for all the outstanding 5-20s of 1865—the total of both calls amounting to $20,500,700. The aggregate calls since Jan. 1 amount to $540,500,700. No further subscriptions for the 4-per-cent. bonds, except for the five-dollar certificates, will be received until further notice. The 6-per-cents will, in the future, be sold for the redemption of 10-40 bonds of the act of March 3, 1864, upon terms to be hereafter prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

IT was reported from New York, on the 4th, that a cutting on through rates of freight from the West to ports in the United Kingdom and Continent of Europe was going on almost uninterruptedly and rates were lower than ever known before. This was owing principally to a large increase in the number of freight steamers now plying between New York and other portions of this country and Europe, and to severe competition between them for cargoes. Provisions, by steam, were quoted at 30s to 32s per ton through rates on flour from the West to Europe and as low as 5s to 5s per barrel, and 18s 9d to 22s 6d per ton for flour to sailing. Much eagerness was displayed to secure cargoes at these prices.

THE New York World of a recent date tells how one of its reporters, an unmarried man, obtained from a New York lawyer a decree of divorce from a supposititious wife, on the ground of incompatibility of temper. The divorce purported to be granted by the Circuit Court of Walworth County, Wis., and was signed by John T. Wentworth, Judge, and Joseph S. Scott, Clerk. A dispatch from Elkhorn of the 4th says that no Joseph S. Scott has ever held the office of Clerk of the Court, and that, at the date of the decree, no court was in session. The present Clerk of the Court declares the decree, seal, signatures and all are a bare-faced forgery.

ONE of the pedestrians who walked in the late Louisville, Ky., six-days' match, named William Harris, died a few days ago in consequence of the exertions he made during the contest. He walked a little more than 300 miles.

CHARLEVOIX.

THE anti-bridge agitators can now find more territory over which to spread the impressions which have heretofore been devoted to Charlevoix. According to the expressions of these gentlemen, Charlevoix is the fountain head of all evil, past, present and to come—more especially, and with greater intensity of wickedness, the bridge scheme. Now aim your barbed shafts of vituperation at Evelius, Evangeline, Hayes, Norwood, Marion and South Arm, which have voted to confirm the tax, and largest minorities of other towns which have favored justice, equality and right by their votes.

THE SCHOOL.—Our village school closes next week Friday for a week's vacation, and the intermediate Department, which has been so excellently taught by Miss Annie Cooper during the winter, will close for the year. The school in all its departments has been a good one, and, as far as we know, very satisfactory to the school patrons. Prof. Mayne takes a very commendable pride in the progress and deportment of his school.

Last Week's Harpers has a cartoon which represents the Republican rooster keeled over and looking pretty sick. The Southern rooster stands on one leg upon the dome of the Capitol, with head and tail up, engaged in a hilarious crow. In the distance the eagle of 1880 is seen swooping down upon him. The United States Government is represented by a broken axle, a war vessel just disappearing beneath the waves, and an old army horse starving on barren plains. Of course it is one of Nast's pictures.

Lettuce is a nutritive and excellent article of food for persons who are of a nervous temperament. Taken late in the day or evening, it promotes sleep by allaying nervousness. It contains a little of the opium principle of the poppy.

As far as heard from, the elections this week in the other States which held them resulted in substantial, and in some cases of sweeping, Republican victories.

Let the solid South keep on with its buncombe, and help make Zachariah Chandler the next President. No man can discount him in executive ability, or honesty, nor would any other man sustain the Presidential honor against Congressional dictation with greater tenacity.

A State election occurred in Rhode Island a few days ago, and resulted in a sweeping Republican victory. The Lodge, Beaches German Syrup has proven itself to be the greatest discovery of its kind in medicine. Every Druggist in this country will tell you of its wonderful effect. Over 200,000 bottles sold last year without a single failure known.

Later returns from the Wisconsin election increase the Republican majorities. Cole, the Republican candidate for Supreme Court Judge, now has a majority of about 13,000, with several counties yet to hear from.

The board of officers who have been investigating the alleged malfeasance of Gen. Fitz John Porter, in their report completely exonerate that gentleman.

The Cincinnati Gazette asks: "Shall we have free and fair elections?" Not if the ex-rebel brunch of the the Democracy can prevent it.

According to the testimony of Mr. David Melver, who is a member of the British Parliament, and one of the principal proprietors of the Cunard steamship line, there is no nation in the civilized world whose trade prospects are so gloomy as those of Great Britain. He says that British exports to the United States are comparatively nothing in volume or value. The balance of trade is so overwhelmingly against Great Britain that he sees nothing but ruin for home industries, whether manufacturing or agricultural, if the present state of things is allowed to continue. The export trade from Liverpool to the United States is so small that when the restrictions on the importation of United States cattle are removed it is intended to make westward voyages with water ballast only, ship owners being unwilling to scramble for the little outward freight recently carried as ballast at nominal rates. The large and constantly increasing export trade of this country is due almost wholly to the superiority and novelty of our manufactured articles; and this superiority is the direct result of the inducements which it has always been our policy to extend to mechanics, inventors and manufacturers, through liberal patent laws and thorough appreciation and patronage of mechanical excellence.

The Zulus have won another victory over the British in South Africa. The prowess of the British lion in that neighborhood is not becoming conspicuously apparent.

Sojourner Truth, the colored sleigh, who is living in her own small domicile in Battle Creek, this State, is now 104 years of age.

It may be set down as a general rule, that whenever a man becomes an independent candidate, he is almost sure to land in the party that he formerly opposed, and to become the slanderer of the friends he has deserted.

The Death-Rate of.

Our country is getting to be fearfully alarming, the average of little being lessened every year, without any reasonable cause. Death resulting generally from the most insignificant origin. At this season of the year especially, a cold is such a common thing that in the hurry of every day life we are apt to overlook the dangers attending it and often find too late, that a Fever or Lung trouble has already set in. Thousands loose their lives in this way every winter, while had Boschee's German Syrup been taken, a cure would have resulted and a large bill a Doctor been avoided. For all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, Boschee's German Syrup has proven itself to be the greatest discovery of its kind in medicine. Every Druggist in this country will tell you of its wonderful effect. Over 200,000 bottles sold last year without a single failure known.

NOTICE.—There will be a meeting of the Township Board, and of the Board of Health, on April 23 at one o'clock p. m., at E. H. Green's Law office, for the purpose of appointing a Health Officer and the transaction of such other business as may come before said Boards. By order;
CUMMER E. SEE.
April 19, 1879. Township Clerk.

"The wilds of Charlevoix," is the way the Petoskey Record puts it. Yes, U any of our denizens want a good square drunk, they go forthwith to Petoskey, where the atmosphere and surrounding are more congenial to their "tastes"—where whiskey can be found every other door, and "soiled doves" arrive by every train.

THE tug Kittie Gaylord has been put in good condition and on Friday got up steam for the first time. Her owners will use her this season in fishing business. They will run about 200 gill nets, and will endeavor to establish a paying business in fresh fish. The Messrs. O'Neill have had an extensive experience in the business, and will make it a success.

PROMOTION.—D. Pierce, Esq., of Colter, St. Lawrence county, N. Y., is in this county with an eye to business. He wishes to purchase farms for his two grandsons, and a site for a tannery. He has traveled through this country considerable, and expresses himself in love with Charlevoix and its surrounding country, and will give it his preference over any other section.

PETOSKEY JUSTICE.—A trio of Charlevoix boys went to Petoskey one day last week, and were foolish enough to imbibe too much Petoskey whiskey, which naturally caused them to act "joyful like." They entered a meat market and called for bologna, and accidently damaged the counter scales to the extent of ten cents—that being the amount which it cost to repair them. For these trifling irregularities the boys, in their defenseless condition were, at midnight taken before a Justice, and, in default of paying a fine were consigned to Little Traverse Jail.

WILBER F. Long, of Melrose, is now in Richmond, Ind., negotiating for an engine and the necessary machinery for a mill to be located at Darrah, the the new station seven miles south of Petoskey, a description of which appeared in the Record a short time since. The mill will have a capacity of from 5,000 to 6,000 feet of hardwood lumber per day, and will be the nucleus around which quite a flourishing little village must in time collect. A store is still much needed, and would command considerable trade from the townships of Springvale, and Bear Lake adjoining. It might not be amiss for some of our enterprising merchants who are seeking to extend their trade by branch stores to look over the ground.—Record.

NAVIGATION NOTES.—The wind during the past week has remained in the northwest, preserving the ice and keeping it imprisoned in the bay on this shore. Grand and Little Traverse Bays are full, as are also the Straits, but the ice is in such a condition that a good brisk wind from the right direction would clear them out.

—The tug Tillson went out on Thursday intending to go to Manistee, but encountered a heavy field of ice at Cathead, and returned.

—The Garelio was successfully launched on Friday.

—The schooner Fleetwing is afloat and fitting out.

—Capt. Kirtland will sail the tug Leviathan this season.

The Close of Vol. 10.

Ten years ago, the SENTINEL was timidly planted here. Charlevoix then could hardly be called a village, and nothing larger than fish boats were seen in our harbor. A decade of years has elapsed, and Charlevoix has grown to corporate dignities.

What the SENTINEL has done in the work of developing Charlevoix county, is on record, and we point to the record with pride.

We can say that the SENTINEL closes the volume with good prospects for the future, and propose to redouble our efforts to make it a good local paper.

The SENTINEL will soon take up its abode in new and commodious quarters, at which time we shall have more to say.

"The guilt breeding amendments must go.

"The principles of secession must be vindicated.

"The Federal brigadiers, whom the Government educated in the doctrine of State Rights, must be denied a voice in the restoration of the Republic, for they sinned with their eyes wide open to the enormity of coercing sovereign Commonwealths, and knew that it was pointblank treason.

"The doctrines of Jefferson, Calhoun and Jefferson Davis must triumph.

"You may cry "Peace! peace! but there will be no peace' until these things have come to pass.

"Our Yankee enemies are sharp witted enough to see that the States speaks what the Southern people feel and believe, and they are alarmed at the situation; but they may just as well reconcile themselves to the inevitable, for this Republic has passed into the possession of the old Democracy, who proposed to build the fort."

THE CAMPBELL CASE.—The habeas corpus case instituted to investigate the grounds for the detention of John Campbell on a charge of grand larceny comes off Friday, but it is expected that all proceedings against him will be dismissed and he set at liberty. The reason for the case ending thus is that the Governor of Michigan has revoked his warrant, it having been made to appear to him that it was secured in order to collect debt, rather than the punishment of a criminal. The story poured into our editorial ear by the Sheriff of Butler county, Iowa, was what we published some time ago concerning the case. That represented Campbell as a horse thief in its technical sense. The circumstances seem to be these, Campbell had lawful possession of the horse but had mortgaged the animal. With this state of affairs existing, he left for this country, which, under the laws of Iowa, constitutes grand larceny, but which in Michigan would be only a misdemeanor. Campbell relates several circumstances connected with the affair, which, if true, would make the charge of horse stealing somewhat unjust. The proceedings instituted against Campbell had only for their object, the collection of the debt, and Campbell states that his exit from the hotel on the night he his arrest was not by the tilgining-rod, but like any respectable man, by the door, and stairs, and he asseverates that Jones, the Butler county Sheriff, understood the matter, and was to have met him at Boyne Falls to receive a certain consideration in settlement of the affair. We cannot vouch for the truth of this, but certain conduct on the part of the said Sheriff looks mysterious, and seems to dove-tail into events as they subsequently came to the surface.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—Readers of Darwin's "The Descent of Man" may remember that he asserts the probability of the posterior or wisdom teeth tending to become rudimentary in the more civilized races of man. Prof. Mantegazza, from the study of 1,249 skulls, of which 844 represented highly civilized races and 297 modern inferior races, and the remaining 128 being Roman, Etruscan, Phœnician and other Nations of antiquity, reaches conclusions which strongly confirm the above-quoted remark of Darwin.

—According to the London Artisan, engineers and users of steam-power do not sufficiently realize the importance of supplying the cylinder with uncondensed elastic steam; or so many badly-protected pipes would not be in use many of them actually inclined toward the cylinder, as though to get as little power. Instead of as much, as possible from a given quantity of water and fuel. Another cause of much waste of steam is in the unjacketed cylinder; for every 1,000 cubic feet of steam, 300 are consumed in keeping the cylinder warm, and heating the water which is the result of condensation in the cylinder.

—The operation of giving a smooth surface to steel and of iron by the use of the lathe has been practically abandoned at the Government works, England. The method of casting these projectiles of exact size and smooth exterior was first carried out on account of the expense which would be saved by the abolition of turning, but a still greater advantage has been found in the superior hardness of the untorned shells—the one-tenth of an inch of the outer skin which it has been usual to turn off the Palliser projectiles, for example, being equal in strength to one-third of the interior surface. By reducing the thickness of the walls, the shell is thus enabled to contain a much larger bursting charge without any diminution of penetrative power, and the whole mass proves more cohesive and serviceable in what may be regarded as its natural skin, than is the case after the material and chemical changes which are wrought in its constitution by the friction of the lathe.

—A correspondent of the London Times, at St. Petersburg, states that in preparing the famous Russian leather for book-binding, the hides to be tanned are first laid to soak for three days and nights in a solution of potash to which some quicklime has been added. The potash used is made of the tree called in Russ lipa, the elm; it is not purified, so that it is of a brown color and easily appearance—about twelve poods of this, each pood being equal to thirty-six English pounds, and two poods of lime, serving for 100 skins. By means of their tongues, when the causticity of the alkali is found weak, a longer solution is allowed. When the skins are then taken to the river and left under water for a day and night. Next a vedro of dog's dung is boiled in as much water as will soak fifty skins, the latter being put into this solution when it is at the heat which the fashioner can bear, and in this they remain one day and night. The skins are then sewed up water-tight; about one-third of what the skins will contain is then filled up with leaves and small twigs, chopped together, of the plant called toloknanka, or bearberry, and the skin filled with water; they are now laid one on the other in a large trough, with heavy stones upon them so as to press the infusion through the pores of the skin in about four hours. After this, the skins are taken to the river and washed, and are ready for the dyeing, the whitest skins being laid aside for the red and yellow leather.

Jaded Heads.

The school of popular morality which existed a generation ago is responsible for no little mischief; and its teachings have not yet quite gone out of fashion. It knew but one virtue—unceasing application to work or study; but one sin—the neglect of business for recreation. For a man to stop work to take pleasure or to play was a symptom of inherent laziness, or, worse, an inclination toward moral, mental or physical disintegration. Untiring industry, even when unnecessary, was raised to the topmost pinnacle of social virtue; and to say that a man "died in the harness" was to pronounce the highest eulogium.

A reaction has taken place; yet the fashion of overdoing still compels many a man to toil on unnecessarily after the physical and mental strain has become all but unbearable; and too often, by the time a man has trained a young family to life conditions which only a large income can sustain, he breaks down and leaves his children to bear the brunt of a poverty made tenfold more severe than it otherwise would be by the habits and tastes of their previous living. And even when the broken-down merchant or professional man leaves his family a competence, they are very apt to inherit an ill-balanced and ill-nourished nervous system, which makes a positive and sustained enjoyment of life an impossibility.

In a recent lecture in this city, Dr. O. R. Agnew said that if there is more nervous disease in this country than elsewhere, it is because the average American youth is supposed to be able to do anything. Men should know on what points they are ignorant, and so escape many damaging strains. Mental application does not weaken the brain. It strengthens it, if not carried to the length at which wholesome food and plenty of sleep fail to refresh it. Never in any age, said Dr. Agnew in another connection, have man's faculties been so taxed as now; and the great problem is for each man to do his share of the world's work and keep well. The civilization of to-day does not call for any faculties that a man does not possess; but it calls upon him to use in the best manner the faculties he has and learn how to bear the strain of living.

One of the first and most imperative symptoms that the strain of living is becoming too great is the jaded head, which Dr. Agnew described as one that cannot be deposited upon for a long stretch of work, that grows weary prematurely, that has to be coaxed from the pillow in the morning, and that does not force the work of the day cheerfully. "There are more of such heads than might be supposed. They are found in every rank of life; but chiefly among persons of sedentary pursuits, and among both sexes, and almost all ages above fourteen. Generally the early symptoms of the malady is discomfort during headwork in the back of the head and in the upper part of the spinal region. He is a happy man who meets this symptom with rest, and seeks in sunlight and fresh air some fresh investments for his nervous system, and drops every habit that does not do him positive good. If he takes to artificial stimulants for relief he will begin a career which, soon or later, will place him among the incurables, or bring him to an untimely end. Alcohol and all sleep-producing drugs are dangerous in the highest degree; for they mask the malady, without curing it. No organ in the human body is so abused as the brain, and no organ is so well fitted for daily use. Still, the brain is not so susceptible to disease as some suppose. It was probable there was not a man present who had not during the day abused his brain by overwork, anger, tobacco, alcohol, fuss, hurry, too little sleep, too much sleep, by indolence, by not studying to be quiet, by not doing his own business, by attempting to do something beyond his reach, by attempting to do something for which he had not been sufficiently educated, by carrying an evil conscience, or by the unmanly strain of trying to outdo his fellow-man. The remedy of the jaded head is the giving up of all habits which cannot be defended by the highest kind of reasoning; the careful determining of each man of his ability to stand work; the avoidance of doing anything for which a man has no adequate education; rest, recreation, and the keeping up of the tissue-building powers by wholesome food."—Scientific American.

How He Got Back His Presents.

A London dressmaker recently had her lover arrested for taking from her certain presents which he had made to her. She stated in court that she had been engaged to the prisoner for several months, and on the previous Saturday evening had met him by appointment. He took her into a jeweler's shop, saying he would buy her a chain, and selected one for £5 15s. He asked her to see how it would look on her watch, and she detached the latter from her own chain, and he tried it on the new one. He afterward put the watch in his pocket, and the chain on the counter. Then he asked to see some wedding-rings, and at his request she took a gold ring from her finger, and tried on three or four wedding-rings, one of which fitted her. Remarking that it looked very nice on her finger, he put the keeper in his pocket, and purchased a pin forthwith for 5s 6d. Saying that would satisfy the jeweler for his trouble. The dressmaker asked the prisoner for the watch and keeper, but he refused to give them to her, remarking that they were his property, and taking her into the jeweler's as he had done was the only means he had of getting them. She gave him into custody. She did not know whether she could call herself engaged to the prisoner still. He had given her the watch and the ring, but had never asked for them back. She had a little quarrel with him a month previously, but that was made up. The magistrate observed that he did not think any jury would convict the prisoner of stealing the things, and therefore the man must be discharged. The dressmaker left the court, remarking that it was a disgraceful thing.—Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

A Noble Son.

There was buried from St. Rose Church, yesterday, a young man named Peter Rapp, a street-car driver. He was the only support of an aged father and mother. And the privation and suffering which he endured that they might have a home, with such necessaries of life as his scanty wages would provide, were doubtless the cause of his death. The family, consisting of the two old people and Peter, who was twenty-six years of age, lived by Washington street, near Front. The father is crippled and infirm. The mother was only able to perform such light labor as was necessary in the care of their little household. All the money that came into their home was provided by the son from his small earnings. He paid their house-rent, supplied them with food, clothing, fuel—everything. During the past winter, and up to a short time ago, when he was prostrated by the disease—quick consumption—which terminated his life, he was in the employ of the Eighth-street car line in the capacity of a driver. Those who know him speak of him as a hero who died that his father and mother might live. His wages were not sufficient to provide all with the necessaries of life, and he chose that he himself should be the one to suffer most. During some of the severest weather of the past winter he wore neither overcoat nor underclothing, and thus contracted the cold that soon resulted in his death. It is a rule of the company that a driver must be ready to go out with his car at twenty minutes before six o'clock each morning or receive no car that day. Although young Rapp had to walk from his home in Fulton to Price's Hill, a distance of four miles and a half, for sixty consecutive mornings during the cold weather of last winter, he never missed a car. It is another rule of the company that, when not on duty, a driver shall not ride on a car without paying regular fare. This rule and his poverty necessitated young Rapp walking home every night after leaving his car. This made him a daily walk of nine miles, and this in addition to the fifteen hours that car-drivers are required to work each day. Standing on a car platform for fifteen hours a day, scantily clothed, perhaps hungry, walking to and from his work through the bitter weather—the suffering of this young man must have been intense. Through it all the comfort of his father and mother was uppermost in his mind, and for two months he never spent a single cent of his wages for himself. Car-drivers receive their pay every evening, and every night he carried his little pittance home and gave it to his mother, even to the last cent. From St. Rose on Thursday evening his remains were borne to the grave, followed by a little band of friends and neighbors. The lamentations of his aged mother touched every heart, and surely a mother never went for a nobler son.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

—The Presbytery of New York certainly have done a timely thing in condemning the habit of buying and reading Sunday newspapers. The practice is by no means limited to Presbyterians, but is on the increase everywhere. It is well every way not to read on Sunday the record of the world's news, so closely connected with business affairs, and servicing to turn the mind in the channels of business, with the accompanying perplexities and worries. And it is worry even more than physical or mental labor that serves to impair vitality and kills more men than the severest toil does. Put that Sunday newspaper away, then, and let the tired brain find rest in turning to other and quieter themes.—Observer of Work.

One of the young ladies who received 72½ per cent. defined hallucination as "the condition of being made clear."

The Appropriate Way of Indicating the Death in Any Trade or Calling.

Collections of quaint epitaphs very often find their way into print; but how appallingly rich our language is in ephitomizes on death, of all styles—serious, slangy and ghastly humorous. Indeed, every deceased person may be suited with an appropriate one, indicative of his profession, character and manner of death. Thus the polite man bids farewell to the world; the merchant closes his early account; the little child is received among the angels; the lamp-lighter has had his lamp of life extinguished; the wearied go to rest; the night watchman's hour of relief strikes; the sailor runs into harbor; the ferryman pays his fare to Charon; the reaper lifes the grass; the gossip goes to the silent tomb; the grave digger sinks into the pit; the flipper's last draught is drawn; the watchmaker runs down; the unhappy breathe out their last sighs; the swindler has gone to his home; the weaver's life-thread is cut by the fates; the bootblack goes to the shining land; the musician's wind has given out or his string has snapped; the dentist is filled in; the tinist pipes on his last note; the low roots in Abraham's lap; the smoker's pipe has gone out; the vigard goes to the land that knows no waking; the commission merchant is consigned to the dust; the nobleman is gathered to his fathers; the lawyer, the inquisitive are closed by death; the second-hander "shoves clouds;" the every day cad and family's mother ever went for a nobler son.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

What He Was Going to Say.

Young Mr. Goldsmith, who is a clerk in one of our dry goods stores upon a fair salary, and who has for some time been paying attention to a young lady whose wealth and, when father is worth forty thousand dollars, made up his mind last week that he would finally settle the question of her regard for him. Thursday evening he arrayed himself in his most prepossessing garments, and omitting his supper from excess of sunshine and total loss of appetite, he repaired to the barber's shop, for the purpose of acquiring that smoothness of face so much admired by his young lady.

"Now," said young Mr. Goldsmith to himself, "it will be as excellent opportunity to think up something to say while I'm being shaved," and he took his seat in the chair, elevated his head, closed his eyes, and put his thoughts into reflective order. He said to himself:

"I want to begin with ——"

"Shave?" inquired the knight of the razor.

"Of course," said young Mr. Goldsmith, somewhat tartly, opening his eyes, "you don't suppose I came in to get a tooth pulled, do you?"

The barber smiled in a soft tone, and proceeded with the work, while young Mr. Goldsmith closed his eyes again, and resumed his musing:

"I'll begin by saying that she cannot be insensible to the fact that her ——"

"Razor pull?" broke in the artist, as he gave an upward stroke under the chin.

"No!" replied young Mr. Goldsmith, crossly. "That her charms have won for her a place in my affections that no amount of ——"

"Pimples?" inquired the barber, as young Mr. Goldsmith winced under the razor; "did I nip a pimple?"

"Go ahead!" said the young man, shortly, and relapsed into: "— That no amount of adversity can ever eradicate. I have longed to sit and drink ——"

"Bay rum?"

Young Mr. Goldsmith shook his head, with a wrathful feeling in his breast that bedeviled the barber no good, and continued: "— And drink in the love that I am certain she bears for me. Then I will kind of lead on until I have my ——"

"Hair cut?" interrupted the barber, unconscious of the mischief he was doing. A malevolent glare from his cue loomer answered his question in the negative.

"— Until I have my points well stated," continued young Mr. Goldsmith, to himself, "and then I will conclude by saying—and now, dearest Ada, will you have ——"

"Any oil?" said the barber, pausing with the bottle in hand.

And then the other customers were horrified at seeing a young man shoot out of the chair, clutch the barber by the nack, and break the oil bottle over his head, and then, as he backed the terrified razor-manipulator against the wall, they heard him scream, in a passion-torn voice:

"You miserable apology for a phonograph, I don't want any oil, any shampoo, any pumatum, any cosmetic, any cigars—any—anything—a-way!"

And young Mr. Goldsmith, grabbing his coat and hat, tore out of the door and up the street, gritting his teeth so hard that his starched collar, gold fillings, and entirely unlaced the nerves of an elderly woman on the opposite side of the street. He didn't propose that evening.—Rockland Courier.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, APR. 29, - - - 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Grant and Tilden the Leading Candidates.

The New York Times of Thursday publishes reports from 170 of its correspondents, in every state of the Union, showing the condition of the public feeling in each relative to candidates for President in 1880. Its correspondents were some time ago instructed to carefully investigate the feeling in each party; and report the results. The returns thus gathered show that the Republicans of the Union are at present overwhelmingly in favor of the nomination of Gen. Grant, and believe that, if he is nominated, his election will surely follow. The Democrats are hardly anywhere in favor of Tilden, but almost everywhere they expect him to be the nominee, and will vote for his nomination. Out of 157 points heard from, Gen. Grant is the favorite in 130, Blaine in ten, and the rest divided. The Democrats in 98 of the 157 places prefer Tilden. Thurman has 23 districts, Hayard 11, and Hendricks and Hancock the rest. These reports, prepared with unusual care and wholly devoid of sensationalism as they are, indicate that, if the Democratic convention were to be held to-day, Tilden would receive the solid votes of twenty-one of the thirty-eight states; and that, if the Republican nomination was made to-day, Gen. Grant would receive the votes of all the states except four or possibly five; and Blaine would receive the votes of four.

Gen. Grant is the first and the enthusiastic choice of all the southern states. He is the strongest in all the northern states, according to these reports, except Maine, California, Nevada, and Oregon. If Grant is not nominated, however, Blaine is the second choice in most of the northern states. In the southern states no second choice is mentioned. The following quotations from the Times' summary show the preponderance of Republican sentiment in the northern states:

New Hampshire—"The Republican leaders and masses are almost unanimous for Grant."

Connecticut—"Grant is mentioned first."

New York—"In no state is the sentiment of the Republicans more clear, pronounced, and unmistakable for Grant."

Pennsylvania—"Grant stands easily first.

Ohio—"Each party feels, after all that it has but one name to conjure with—Grant for the Republicans and Tilden for the Democrats."

Michigan—"The local liking for Senator Chandler has been greatly strengthened by his outspoken condemnation of the southern schemes, but among all classes there are found ardent supporters of Grant, and his hold upon the people of the state is growing."

Iowa—"A strong feeling that the country needs a third term of Grant has been at work upon the minds of the Iowa Republicans. Blaine is very popular out there, but the drift of the party preference is for Grant."

Wisconsin—"The Republicans of the State put their trust in Grant."

Kansas—"It is clear that any full expression of opinion would be in favor of Grant."

Minnesota—"Among the Republicans there is no room for doubt that if the choice were to be made at once Geo. Grant's name would be the only one mentioned."

Colorado—"Three-fourths of the Republicans are for Grant—the rest are for Blaine."

California—"Blaine's position on the anti-Chinese bill endeared him to the Californian heart, and his name is now the highest in favor with Republicans; but Gen. Grant is so nearly even with him that circumstances may turn the scale."

Of course we are not in any way or degree responsible for the estimate of the Times, and cannot vouch for their correctness; though we presume them to be generally correct, inasmuch as they substantially agree with the information obtained from other sources. We think it therefore safe to conclude that Gen. Grant is at present the unmistakable first choice of the Republican party for President in 1880, and that Tilden is at present the most confident expectation of the Democratic party for President in 1880, though Tilden never was, and is not now, the choice of anybody. With the Republicans, at present, Blaine is the second choice of the majority; and Thurman the second choice of the Democrats. Who will be first and second choice next year time will tell. The first choice and successful man in each party next year may or may not be their present first.—Post and Tribune.

—A Republican that isn't a "stalwart" Republican to-day hust have an awful weakness in his back; and several vacant rooms to rent in his upper story.

—More than half of the inhabitants of Italy, can neither read or write. What overwhelming Democratic majorities they must have in that country!

—Chapin says that impatience Aries the blood sooner than age or sorrow. True, perhaps, but look at Tilden, shriveled and by impatience and age and sorrow.

—The Republican Greenbacker begins to pull the cotton out of his ear. Just as soon as he gets it out there will be a flea put in that ear. And it will be labeled "1880."

—Congressman Hurd is said to be a long-headed chap. Judging from his recent speech in Congress we'll bet his ears will come together on top, no matter how long his head is.

—Sending a milk and water man to Congress nowa-days is too much like putting a piece of white chalk in the hammer of a flint-lock musket, or knocking down a mad bull with a wet rag.

—Next time I catch a rattlesnake in my door yard I'll jerk his fangs out and then let him rattle, if he wants to. Ought to have done it before—blast the old serpent!—Uncle Sam. Yes, that's so, uncle.

—There are upwards of 10,000,000 cows in the United States. Allowing ten minutes for milking one of them it would take over 190 years for one hired man to milk all of them. But, then, when a mad has a good stool to sit on and nothing else to do don't mind it.

—In 1880 every Union soldier will be called upon to do one of two things. He will either cast his ballot in the same direction that he sent his bullet or vote against the side on which he fought. It is well enough to begin to game these baldheaded facts right square in the face now.

On the 14th, while the Czar of Russia was taking his morning walk, an assassin fired at him five times with a revolver; but, fortunately, none of the shots took effect. The assassin was promptly arrested, and his trial will doubtless develop the motive of his crime. It is probable that it will prove to be inspired by politics—perhaps by the Nihilists. Within the last year or two, there have been a number of attempts to regicide by members of factions or parties allied to the German Socialists. The Nihilists of Russia have been guilty recently of a number of political assassinations and attempted assassinations of government officials; but the Czar has been so universally and so well beloved by the people that his life was not considered particularly threatened. The Emperor of Germany however, is also greatly and deservedly loved by his people; yet twice have Socialist assassins attempted his life within a short time.

The Louisville Journal says "no Republican was ever known to desire a Northern State to be represented by a negro. That is one of the many peculiarties of Republican philanthropy." But, if in any Northern State the negroes were in a majority, as they are in some of the Southern, they would be likely to have a representation. That is a Northern peculiarity.—Boston Harbor.

Two darkies were taunting their courage. "I isn't 'feared o' nothin', I isn't," said one. "Den, Sam, I reckon you isn't 'feared to loan me a dollar?" "No Julus, I isn't 'feared to loan you a dollah, but I does hate to part wid an ole fren' forebber."

Americans traveling abroad complain that the only news from the United States which finds its way into the columns of the press of foreign countries is of a criminal nature. And, as a consequence, foreigners, expect the more intellinent class, have a very erroneous idea of the civilization of the new world. In European countries scandels and crimes are mentioned only in the court calendar, and then very briefly. In America the meanest tramp that is choked to death by a legal hatter has a column telegraphed all over the country—just how often he kicked, and the words he uttered, and the crazy acts of the mob which gathered upon such occasions. There is good reason to believe that the publicity given to crime by American news apers has done much to foster it.

The Republican revival is booming at such a rate that even the Cincinnati Gazette, right on the ground, cannot tell whether the Republican majority of Ohio is to be 50,000 or 100,000 next fall.

When the Confederates turned out the Senate officials who had served faithfully and efficiently for years to make room for raw Democrats, and ex rebels at that, who never had any experience in the offices to which they were appointed, the people were made acquainted with the kind of civil service reform the Democratic party believes in.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

ACCORDING to a New York dispatch of the 7th, the New York World had instructed its reporter to prosecute the shyster who procured what purported to be a decree from a Wisconsin Court, divorcing him from a supposititious wife, under that provision of the law of New York, which makes the prescribing of a legal paper of the character and in the manner described forgery in the third degree, and punishes the offender by sentence to the State Prison for from one to five years. It was also stated that Judge Wentworth has offered to go to New York at any time as a witness to establish the forgery.

THE United States Supreme Court has decided that the lands of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill., are properly exempt from taxation.

NEWS, thought to be reliable, was received at Wichita, Kan., on the 8th, that the Cheyenne Indians were on the warpath. They had stolen away from camp and started in the direction of Western Kansas. Agent Mills and an army officer, who went to remonstrate, were ordered to leave.

ON the 9th, the Secretary of the Treasury issued a call for the redemption of $10,000,000 of 10-40 bonds of 1864, principal and interest payable on the 9th of July.

THE business failures in Chicago during the month of March numbered fifteen, with liabilities aggregating $471,703, and assets amounting to $342,950.

A DISPATCH was received at San Francisco, on the 9th, from the white inhabitants of Sitka, praying the President for protection against an anticipated attack by the Indians.

JOHN P. PHAIR, who had been three times reprieved since the murder was committed, four years ago, was hung at the State Penitentiary at Windsor, Vt., on the 10th.

THE Fidelity Savings Bank building, the Fidelity Safe Deposit Vaults and Hoyle's Theater, property in Chicago belonging to the estate of the defunct Fidelity Savings Institution of that city, were sold at auction by the Receiver, on the 10th, for $182,000.

A NEW ORLEANS telegram of the 10th says the authorities there had resolved to quarantine for twenty days all vessels arriving from West Indian ports, the Gulf of Mexico south of Texas, and South America, after May 1, to prevent the introduction of yellow fever.

ON the 10th, at the Cleveland (Ohio) Rolling Mills, a bar of iron being run through the rollers caught a small boy standing near in its fiery embrace, and literally burned his body in two.

NEAR Minyah, D. T., on the 10th, seven Indians attacked Sergt Kennedy and his escort. The latter was killed and Sergt Kennedy was badly wounded. The scene of the killing was about forty-five miles from Fort Keogh. Sergt'k. was lately the signal observer at Deadwood.

DURING a recent thunder-storm at Calcasa, a tower of large size exploded with a loud report. Two bushels of fragments were secured.

THE National Executive Committee of the Colored Emigration Society have recently adopted resolutions asking Government aid, through the Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments, for the destitute colored emigrants arriving at St. Louis and other points on the Mississippi River.

PROF. KING, the aeronaut, says he will make an attempt, within a few months, to cross the Atlantic in a balloon.

THE Providence Savings Bank and Trust Company, of Providence, Pa., suspended, on the 12th, being unable to meet its obligations after having taken advantage of the sixty-days' law. Liabilities, $75,000; nominal assets, $100,000.

ON the 12th, at St. Louis, Mo., E. H. Brown, the Manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company, refused to produce certain telegrams before the Grand Jury, and was ordered into the custody of the City Marshall, for contempt.

PETER SNELL, a sailor, who was bitten, some weeks before, by a supposed mad dog, died, at Milwaukee, Wis., on the 12th, from hydrophobia.

THE recent prairie fires in Dakota came very near destroying Forts Stevenson and Lincoln. In each case the garrison turned out and worked vigorously to turn the flames.

Personal and Political.

MUNICIPAL elections were held in Ohio on the 7th. In Cincinnati, Jacob, the Republican candidate, was elected Mayor by about 500 majority. Columbus also elected a Republican Mayor by 1,700 majority. Sandusky elected a Democratic Mayor by over 900 majority, and Toledo a Democratic Mayor by about 1,500 majority. The entire National ticket, with the possible exception of Police Judge, was elected in Toledo, by about 400 to 500 majority.

THE returns from the election in Michigan, received on the morning of the 8th, indicated the election of the Republican State ticket, headed by Cambell for Judge of the Supreme Court, by about 10,000 majority.

ON the 7th, the United States Supreme Court rendered a decision in the Cairo first-batch Whisky-Ring cases. Defendants testified against themselves and their associates, and were thereby released from fines and penalties assessed for crooked practices, as well as immunity from criminal punishment; pleading that they were promised such immunity and release by the District Attorney. The Court sat down upon this plea, holding that the District Attorney had no authority to make such promise, thus reversing the decree in the Court below, where it was held that it had.

THE Iowa State Central National Greenback Committee have called a State Convention, to meet in Des Moines, on the 25th of May.

IN Albany, N. Y., on the 8th, the Democrats elected ten, the Democrats and Nationals twenty-one, and the Republicans four Supervisors. John Guttman (Dem.) was re-elected Justice of the Justices' Court, by 3,000 majority.

A CINCINNATI dispatch of the 8th states that out of twenty-seven towns in Ohio from which returns had been received, the Republicans had carried seventeen, the Democrats seven, and the Independents three.

KANSAS CITY (Mo.) has elected G. M. Kesley (Greenback) Mayor. The Republicans elected the Treasurer and four out of six Aldermen.

THE Democratic Members of the National House of Representatives met in caucus, on the afternoon of the 9th, and adopted a resolution that the House will hereafter meet on Mondays, so as to allow the introduction of general legislation.

THE New Jersey municipal elections occurred, on the 9th. New Brunswick and Princeton went Republican; Railway elected a Democratic Mayor over the present incumbent; Hoboken elected a Republican Mayor by a Democratic Water Commissioner. The vote in Jersey City shows gains from the Republicans in all the boards of local government.

THE Mormon Conference at Salt Lake closed on the 9th. John Taylor was re-elected President of the Twelve Apostles, but no successor to Brigham Young as President of the Church was chosen.

THE United States Senate decided, on the 9th, by a vote of 35 to 28, that Charles H. Bell, of New Hampshire, was entitled to a seat in that body by virtue of appointment of the Governor. Mr. Bell was consequently sworn in to fill the vacancy from that State.

THE Massechusetts House of Representatives has rejected a bill to secure women the right to vote on municipal affairs in cities and towns. A bill to give women the right to vote for members of School Committees was passed.

THE Kentucky State Republican Convention was held, in Louisville, on the 10th. The following nominations were made: Governor, Walter Evans; Lieutenant-Governor, D. S. Deming; Attorney-General, W. O. Bradley; Treasurer, Richard E. Stall; Auditor, John A. Williamson; Register, M. O'Donnell; Superintendent, M. McIntyre. The resolutions affirm the platform adopted in Cincinnati, in 1876; favor the education of the people of the State; advise the calling of a Convention to amend the State Constitution; condemn the Democratic mismanagement of State affairs, etc., etc.

THE Republican Senators met in caucus at Washington, on the afternoon of the 11th, and, after a full discussion, agreed to make every possible effort to defeat the passage of the Army Appropriation bill as it came from the House, for the reason mainly that the enactment of the sixth section would prevent the use of the posse comitatus on election days for the execution of civil processes of any and all descriptions issued by the authority of the United States. This was the position taken by ex-Secy Robeson in his recent speech in the House. The caucus also unanimously agreed to disregard the position taken by Mr. Garfield, that the legislation would be acceptable if presented as a separate measure.

SENATOR WINDOM has been chosen President; E. M. McPherson, Treasurer, and Prof. Richard Greener, Secretary of the Executive Committee of the National Emigration Aid Society. Arrangements will be completed for perfecting local organizations. The officers of the association stated, on the 12th, that their appeals for aid had met with favorable responses from philanthropic persons North and South, irrespective of party.

GEN. RICHARD TAYLOR, a son of the late President Taylor, and a Confederate General of renown, died in the City of New York, on the 12th.

ALFRED A. BURNHAM, a former Member of Congress from Connecticut, died at his residence, in Hartford, on the 12th.

Foreign.

ACCORDING to a London telegram of the 7th, information had been received that the Khedive of Egypt had announced that he had tired of Franco-Anglo financial schemes, and would hereafter manage his finances to suit himself. Wilson, the English Minister, and Dellignieres, the French Minister, had been dismissed and a new Cabinet formed under the Presidency of Cherif Pasha, composed exclusively of natives.

EDWARD CLARK, a distinguished London civil engineer and contractor, died, on the 7th, for $3,800,000.

THE finderpest has made its appearance among the cattle with the British army in Afghanistan, and threatens to seriously embarrass the commissariat.

THE Cardinal Vicar of the Pope has issued a written notice for publication, in which he complains bitterly of the establishment of foreign Protestant schools almost under the shadow of the Vatican, and asks for liberal contributions for the increase and improvement of Catholic schools.

FURTHER advices were received from Cape Town, on the evening of the 8th, which announced another disaster suffered by the British forces in South Africa. About 4,000 Zulus had attacked a company of the Eighteenth Regiment, which was convoying a wagon train intended for the relief of Col. Pearson, and killed all but five men of the 104 of which it was composed.

THE steamer Surbiton left New York for Rotterdam on the 18th of February. She has just arrived at her destination, and nothing has been heard of her. She is believed to have foundered.

ENGLAND and France have each dispatched agents to Egypt on a mission of friendship of the Khedive as explanation of recent events.

NEWS was received in London, on the 8th, of another disaster to British arms in South Africa. It appears that Col. Pearson, who for some time had been beleaguered at Eksowe, and had to choose between death by starvation and an attempt to cut his way through the surrounding Zulus, adopted the latter alternative and made a sortie. The result was that the sortie party was repulsed, and that nearly all the participating troops were killed. The situation of Col. Pearson was considered extremely critical, and it was believed that King Cetewayo would attack and destroy his command, and then destroy the reinforcing regiments in detail.

THERE were numerous labor riots in the Durham colliery district, on the 8th, and many of the iron works closed, the managers having left because of fear of bodily harm. An extra police force was sent to the different collieries to protect the non-strikers.

ON the 9th, the Paris Patrie announced the betrothal of King Alfonso, of Spain, to the Archduchess Maria, of Austria. It was stated that the marriage would take place in July.

THE Russian Revolutionary Committee has sent letters to all the Imperial dignitaries at St. Petersburg, saying that, while they do not intend to attack the Czar, they will kill his officers, especially the heads of the Police Department, so long as the condition and treatment of the political prisoners remains unameliorated.

ACCORDING to a Berlin telegram of the 10th, 1,040 Nihilists had been already arrested in Finnland. The police there had received a letter announcing that the murderer of Gen. Kropotkin had arrived in New York.

THE points in dispute between Turkey and Austria have been settled, by granting permission to the latter to occupy three points on the River Loon, in the outskirts of Novi Bazar, and commanding the three only practicable crossing places.

A REPORT prevailed in London, on the 10th, that England and France had decided to demand of the Sultan the deposition of the Khedive of Egypt.

ON the 10th, the German Government authorized the official denial of the report that it intended to increase the volume of silver currency.

CARL BECK, the German poet, died on the 11th.

AN attempt was made, on the 11th, to assassinate the Governor of Kieff.

THE corpse of a student was recently found near the Cathedral, in Kasan, labeled "Sentenced to death, as a traitor, by the Socialistic Revolutionary Committee."

NINE persons were killed and twenty-five injured, on the 11th, through an accident to the Moscow mail train.

A SEVERITIES disaster of the 11th says the loss of life by the late inundation had been found to be seventy-seven, instead of 2,000 as first reported.

A PARIS dispatch of the 12th says the Metzeray affair had been arranged, and that the French military force in possession had the new rules provide for the appointment of Select Committees, on the Census, Reform of the Civil Service, the Law Respecting the Ascertainment and Declaration of the Presidential Election, the Prevention of Epidemic Diseases, Ventilation of the Hall, Causes of the Depression of Labor, and also to increase the committee membership as follows: Enrolled Bills to seven; Coinage to eleven; Ways and Means to thirteen; Agriculture, Judiciary, Elections, Commerce and Appropriations to fifteen each; that the Committee on Commerce shall have the same privilege to report bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors that is awarded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general Appropriation bills; forbidding the reprinting of the bills of one Congress when introduced in another Congress; giving to the Committees on Banking and Currency, Coinage and Ways and Means power to report at any time, and authorizing the majority to fix a day for the consideration of any public bill reported by one of these committees; providing that the morning hour shall not be dispensed with on any day for any purpose, except by a two-thirds vote; that the rules regulating the examination of witnesses in the House and the Committee of the Whole shall be changed so that the practice of making it in those members desiring to speak is proper, in order to facilitate the reading of the evidence to the wishes of members; but that it shall not be read unless it is called for by members absolutely by his list, but shall exercise a wise and just discretion.

THE New Hampshire Senatorial case was further considered in the Senate, on the 10th, and the question was finally passed, by 28—declaring Mr. Bell entitled to the seat by virtue of appointment by the Governor. A resolution to adjourn until the 14th was rejected by yeas 27, nays 34. The legislative organization bill was taken up by the House, in Committee of the Whole, and an amendment was agreed to repealing the sections providing for the holding of elections at the national and directing the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to provide for the payment of arrears of pensions, "to issue immediately, in payment thereof, out of the ten millions of legal-tender currency now in the Treasury, kept as a special fund for the redemption of fractional currency, such amount of such fractional currency may be redeemed by any class of pensioners, as the Secretary may deem best." The legislative appropriation bill was taken up by the House, in Committee of the Whole, and an amendment was agreed to appropriating $1,000 for the expenses of the Electoral Commission. A resolution to adjourn until the 14th was rejected by yeas 27, nays 34. The legislative appropriation

That Bridge Tax.

Smith, of the Charlevoix Sentinel, sends up his little yell of victory, and with the characteristic modesty for which he is noted, takes unto himself much credit for the result of the vote on the bridge question in Charlevoix county. He has assumed from the outset that the bridge bonds were legal, and must be paid, but dishonestly ignoring his duty as a county journalist, he has studiously avoided any reference to the methods used to hasten the payment of those illegal bonds upon the people. Every communication relative to the origin of this iniquitous scheme which might affect the vote thereon, has been suppressed, and if the result is at all attributable to Smith and the Sentinel, it has been accomplished only by the most persistent misrepresentation, and because parties familiar with the true inwardness of the scheme have been denied a hearing through the columns of of their county paper. With a view of bringing the matter before the people, notwithstanding Smith assumes the question as forever settled, we ask permission to occupy a small space to your paper in behalf of the almost unanimous vote against this project in the eastern part of this county.

First, The resolution as presented to the Board was for an appropriation of $1,500, and the vote stood six, to five against—not a two-thirds majority as required by law, and consequently illegal.

Second, The bonds were issued calling for $4,541.66, principal and interest.

Third, E. H. Green, the present Chairman of the Board, in every instance involving a money appropriation by the county, be it ever so small, has never hesitated to declare it lost unless sustained by a two thirds majority. This same Hon E. H. Green and other "virtuous denizens of Charlevoix" issued and negotiated these bonds knowing them to be illegal, and have persistently labored to make the people believe that since they have been issued and sold, that we must pay them, using their clapsaddle, the Sentinel, as a mouth-piece.

The editor of said Sentinel has been a faithful servant, and closed his columns against those who desired that the people might know the facts in the matter of the bridge tax, and constantly held before the voters that it was boy's play, dishonorable, repudiation, &c., to vote against said tax, as the bonds were issued and must be paid, but forgot to tell them who might possibly pay them in the end. After the vote was taken under these circumstances, and a majority found to be in favor of paying said bonds, in his usual ungentlemanly and cowardly manner, he devotes a column of his invaluable paper to abusing us.

Smith, please look that column over, and in your next issue be a man for once in your life, and tell your readers just how many false statements you did make in that "one column" of editorial abuse. In regard to the ring, its existence and workings will be demonstrated in due time, for the end is not not yet. More anon.

W. C. NILES.
J. E. DARRAH.

Editor Sentinel please copy.—Record

The above joint stock production is a marvel of effrontery and falsehood. In regard to the legality of the bridge bonds, our opinion from the first has run parallel with those of Messrs. Niles and Darrah. We believed, and so did they, that the action of the Board in issuing the bonds was legal. Orvis D. Wood, the Supervisor from Norwood, was as uncompromising an enemy of the bridge scheme as either Messrs. Niles or Darrah, and he, as Chairman of the Board, declared the vote on the bridge question carried, by a majority vote. Why did not Mr. Niles arise and appeal, or raise the point of a two-thirds vote being necessary? He did not but yielded to the decision. There was not a member of the Board that raised the point of illegality until after the bonds were issued!

The point raised that the amount authorized was $3,500 instead of $4,541.66 is weak. The Board authorized the issuing of bonds to the amount of $3,500 bearing interest. Does Mr. Niles suppose for a moment that bonds bearing no interest could be negotiated?

The bonds were issued by authority of the Board of Supervisors, without protest by any member thereof (because of any alleged illegality,) and then we said they must be paid, and the people at the polls expressed the same sentiment.

These two persons, one puffed up by the mightiness of his egotism, and the other by the possession of a magnificent constituency of nineteen voters, say that we have denied them a hearing, and suppressed communications from that side. This statement is a good square, unalloyed LIE! Neither Mr. Niles, Mr. Darrah, nor any other person representing that side of the bridge question, have ever addressed a communication to the SENTINEL or its editor upon that subject, nor have they ever verbally asked for space in our columns.

We have not misrepresented the question. The proceedings of the Board of Supervisors were published from the records, and of their legality the people are as capable of judging as we. We only held that, the bonds having been issued and negotiated, it was "boys play" to submit it to a popular vote, and so it was.

These two petty Jacobins, buried up in the belief of their eminent superiority over the balance of God's creatures, have attempted to carry Charlevoix county by storm, and being thwarted at every turn, cry out in the intensity of their anger and chagrin. Remember gentlemen that the sun does not set within the narrow scope of your vision, and that outside of Springvale and Melrose humanity exists, and the world moves.

Instead of going to England to borrow money, the Canadians have recently been turning their attention to the United States. A 5 per cent. loan for the province of Quebec has been successfully negotiated in New York.

The Legislature has fixed the legal rate of interest in this State at six per cent, but leaves the rate on contracts unlimited, repeals the usury penalties, and re-enacts the section relating to interest computed upon over-due interests.

New Jersey responds to Ohio and Michigan. The municipal elections in that state, on the 9th, put the Republicans in possession of nearly all the leading towns, and gave them handsome gains over previous elections.

The Legislative correspondent of the Detroit Free Press, at Lansing, thinks that the progress in disposing of legislation is not such as to give any hope of a speedy adjournment. He says: "No one looks for the closing of the session much before the 1st of June."

The Death-Rate of.

Our country is getting to be fearfully alarming, the average of little being increased every year, without any reasonable cause, death resulting generally from the most insignificant origin. At this season of the year especially, a cold is such a common thing that in the hurry of every day life we are apt to overlook the dangers attending it and often find too late, that a Fever or Lung trouble has already set in. Thousands loose their lives in this way every winter, while had Boschee's German Syrup been taken, a cure would have resulted and a large bill a Doctor been avoided. For all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, Boschee's German Syrup has proven itself to be the greatest discovery of its kind in existence. Every Druggist in this country will tell you of its wonderful effect. Over 900,000 bottles sold last year without a single failure known.

Our Candidate for Congress.

The Ninth Congressional District has been represented for nearly six years by a man who has not only faithfully and efficiently looked after the affairs of his constituency, but has proven himself a giant in an assembly where pigmies are notably conspicuous.

Jay A. Hubbell's ability is of an order that commands attention and brings results in any cause in which it is put forth, and his record does not need an apology. He is the one who, among the entire Michigan Congressional delegation, was selected as a member of the National Republican Committee, twice in succession.

His views upon National finances are eminently sound, and his utterances upon this question have had more influence in Congress than those of any other member of the House. The fact has been developed at Washington, and is very generally conceded that his financial scheme will be adopted before Congress adjourns, as his plan takes away, practically, every objection to and destroys the force of every argument against resumption, for the reason that resumption will immediately take place the moment this measure is adopted. It is an acknowledged fact that Secretary Sherman is indebted to him for every essential idea in the plan which he laid before the Senate Committee a short time ago, and which forms the basis of the measure under consideration by that committee, and soon to be introduced in that body.

Every consideration which can be named in connection with the interests of the District demand that Mr. Hubbell be continued as our representative. If it is a good rule that business men should give the preference to tried, trusty and experienced agents, it is a better one that public affairs should be intrusted to men who possess these requisites.

The only reason existing why Mr. Hubbell should be displaced is that sectional and personal ambition must be gratified, and the eloquent Generals and Colonels of the southern portion of the District given an opportunity to display their slumbering powers.

We are confident that Mr. Hubbell will again be the choice of the Republicans of this portion of the District.

HOTEL AT BOYNE.—Geo. B. Thompson has the frame up of a hotel at the head of Pine Lake. The upright is 20x28, 18 feet high, and the wing 16x24, 16 feet high. He expects to have it completed this summer.

HAYES ELECTION.—The Township of Hayes elected the following officers on the 23d: Supervisor, Joel Weaver; Clerk, F. H. Burgess; Treasurer, Moses Cooper, Supt. of Schools, Levi House; School Inspector, Geo. O. Scott; Highway Commissioner, Alex McSana; Justice, Geo. Nada; Constables, Lorin Hamlin, Luman Scott, Wm. Smith, Garrett Ackert.

A. B. TURNER, of the Grand Rapids Eagle, was tried at Petoskey, on Tuesday, on the charge of violating the game law by shooting pigeons on their nests. The jury acquitted him of the charge. It hardly seemed credible that a veteran sportsman, like Mr. Turner, would be guilty of the conduct charged, and we are glad to record his acquittal.

Volume X., No. 1.

Something over nine years ago the SENTINEL timidly sent forth its first issue. From that time to this, with the exception of one issue, its weekly publication has been uninterrupted, and today it presents to its readers the first number of its tenth volume under the same management which almost a decade ago founded it.

We say it not boastingly, yet we say it, that the SENTINEL has since its first number been the right arm of the Pine Lake region, and in times past, when labor was needed more than now, it has struck many hard blows in the interest of Charlevoix county. It possesses testimonials of popular appreciation of its works, and its present firm establishment is a testimonial which is more substantial than all others, and testifies in unmistakable terms to public favor.

The type, presses and material of the SENTINEL belong to us; but its services, good words and watchful attention belong to the people who have watered its roots and nurtured it life until it is now able to bid the winds blow and the waves dash.

The SENTINEL thanks its patrons for what it has received at their hands, and steps out into the new volume upon solid footing, and with a clear sky overhead.

CHARLEVOIX AS A BUSINESS CENTER.—Daily it becomes more apparent that the area of country of which Charlevoix is the natural business center, is rapidly on the increase. Almost daily we meet strange vehicles and strange faces, which hail from adjoining towns and counties. It is becoming evident to all who reside within a radius of twenty miles to the south and south-east that Charlevoix is the most accessible point for them to do their marketing and buying, and advantageous in many other regards, and our merchants bear testimony to a growing trade from that locality. The section of country of which we speak is by far the most extensively developed of any which is tributary to this place, and is quite as naturally dependent upon Charlevoix for marketing facilities as any portion of the lake region.

In the past farmers have found it difficult to dispose of their grain here for cash, and the reasons have been obvious. The necessity has been observed, and will hereafter be supplied. This want once met, there is no obstacle in the way of Charlevoix becoming the principal grain center of even more than the Pine Lake region, and, as a matter of course, the principal trading point.

Our facilities for shipping cheaply, and our easy accessibility from all points in the interior are sure indicators of all we have predicted.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 9th, a bill was reported from the Finance Committee and placed on the calendar, to repeal and put in operation it was the opinion of the Committee that this would afford all the necessary additional means of any regulations. Mr. Ingalls moved that 5,000 copies of the report be printed. Agreed to. Mr. Hamlin introduced a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a light-house, fog-signal and life-saving station on Point au Sable, Lake Michigan. Referred to the Committee on Commerce. Mr. Sherman, from the Committee on Finance, reported back the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of United States bonds and coupons in exchange for silver dollars, with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. Agreed to. Mr. Blaine moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to provide for the payment of the awards of the Halifax Commission. Agreed to. The bill was then read and passed. The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the bill to provide for the payment of awards of the Geneva Tribunal of Arbitration. Mr. Blaine said that the bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations without amendment, and he hoped it would be passed. Mr. Morgan said that he was opposed to the bill, and he would like to have the yeas and nays taken upon it. The yeas and nays were ordered, and resulted—yeas 39, nays 16. So the bill was passed. OUR KADIX LETTER

New York, April 26, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

After a partial and troubled slumber of two or three years the Beecher scandal has surprised the intelligent and disgusted everybody by waking up and thrusting itself afresh upon society. As this is just the sort of news which flies on the wings of the wind to even the furthest and most obscure corners of the land, it would be unreasonable to suppose that any of your readers are unacquainted with the fact that Mrs. Tilton has re-confessed apparently with all earnestness and solemnity. I was on print of the coming publication of her letter in advance of its appearance, and was told to look out for a tremendous social convulsion when the thunderbolt should fall. Up to date, however, the social convulsion has not been visible, not only the weariness and disgust which I have alluded to. The trouble is that the unfortunate Mrs. Tilton has heretofore proved herself so void of moral sense and any respect for the truth, that it is generally taken for granted that she is falsifying whenever she opens her mouth. There are those, of course, who believe her statements, but only those who have believed them all along. One reason given for this confession is that it is only a necessary preliminary to the reconciliation of Mr. and Mrs. Tilton, which reconciliation is unquestionably probable. However that may be, this episode, including Mr. Beecher's prompt denial of the renewed charge, will strengthen the latter with the majority of people.

There is no doubt that Mrs Tilton is the victim of a mania or form of insanity well known among the medical profession. Her case is not very different from that of an English lady of noble birth, who, a few years ago, figured in the courts as a result of similar charges which she brought against some of the most prominent men in that country while laboring under just such an hallucination. She is really more to be pitied than blamed, though she is none the less a nuisance on that account.

Poor Tweed is out of jail at last, and beyond all earthly vicissitudes. His death, briefly announced in my last, was quiet and peaceful, but unspeakably sad, as the ending of a life which had great possibilities, but which proved worse than a failure. The family which henceforth must bear alone the disgraced name, were with him in jail at the last moment, evincing the affection and devotion which its members have unvaryingly displayed toward its fallen head. The funeral, which occurred on Wednesday, was private and unobtrusive, and the remains were interred in Greenwood. In regard to this cemetery, there exists an old, almost forgotten law, providing that no person dying in jail shall be buried within its limits; but no attempt was made in this case to enforce its prohibition.

There is no doubt that there are a hundred or so citizens of this State who breathe more freely now that the mouth of the ex-boss is sealed for all time. During his life time a sword of Damocles, of varying weight and sharpness, was suspended over the head of each of them. There was no telling at what moment circumstances might occur which would uncover some little affair of bygone years, which one or more of these gentlemen would greatly prefer to have remain bygone. But now the man who alone knew the whole story, and was in a position to tell it, is out of the way, and the uncomfortable many smile a reassured smile and hold up their heads with virtuous stiffness while they piously lament the sins of the dead man.

The death of Col. Hitchcock, commander of our famous Ninth Regiment, furnished occasion this week for a military funeral such as we have not seen before in a good while. The display of the militia with reversed arms, draped flags and funeral music, was magnificent, and the multitudes witnessing it gave Broadway and Fifth Ave a decided holiday appearance. Col. Hitchcock was a popular citizen and officer who especially distinguished himself during the railroad riots last year.

A runaway in New York is a common and usually not a remarkable occurrence, but an accident of this kind took place on Thursday which is well worth mention. On the morning of that day John Strickland, one of P. T. Barnum's oldest and best drivers, took out for exercise his six horse team hitched to a heavy baggage wagon. The leaders took fright at an elevated railway train, and in a moment the panic stricken animals started off at ungovernable speed. No human strength could avail to check such a course, so shouting a hurried warning to the bystanders, Strickland gathered the reins and devoted himself with coolness and skill to the desperate task of guiding the team as far as possible to avoid collisions in the hope that they might finally quiet down and be got under control. Instead of this, the horses grew more frantic at every bound, and it was evident that disaster must result. The heavy wagon was provided with a brake which the driver applied with such force as to hold the wheels from revolving, and yet the vehicle seemed no more than a feather to the furious beasts. A long mile they ran, coaches, wagons, and pedestrians scattering like chaff before them, a spectacle that no one who beheld it will be likely to forget, until they reached the Grand Central depot when a wheel caught in a frog of the horse railroad track, snapping the heavy wrought iron axle like a pipe stem. Then as the wagon tipped another wheel was torn off in the same manner and the heroic Strickland whose unflinching courage had saved perhaps a score of lives, was violently thrown to the sidewalk and instantly killed, his head being crushed on the pavement.

Incited to great deeds by O'Leary's unparalleled walk in London, an ambitious pedestrian named Hughes is about to attempt to beat the former's feat of walking 521 miles in six days. $1,000 is wagered that he will cover more than this distance in the time specified, the pedestrian to walk, or run, or both, as he pleases. It is not believed that he will be successful.

Another of the many directions in which physical endurance is tested in these days is dancing against time. We have here a certain dancing-master named Cartier, who had distinguished himself on several occasions in this direction, but who this week surpassed any former efforts by waltzing for sixteen consecutive hours without stopping. Now I know that dancing is usually considered very good fun, but doesn't this particular performance look a little too much like work?

A Gentle Hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,—it is wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home for immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill, and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing Consumption, Hemorrhages, Pneumonia, Severe Coughs, Croup or any disease of the Throat or Lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist Geo. W. Crouter, will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and village on this continent. Sample bottles for trial, 10c.; regular size, 75c.

"German Syrup"

No other medicine in the world was ever given such a test of its curative qualities as Boschee's German Syrup. In three years two million four hundred thousand small bottles of this medicine were distributed free of charge by Druggists in this country to those afflicted with Consumption, Asthma, Croup, severe Coughs Pneumonia and other diseases of the Throat and Lungs, giving the American people undeniable proof that German Syrup will cure them. The result has been that Druggists in every town and village in the United States are recommending it to their customers. Go to your Druggist, and ask what they know about it. Sample Bottles 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents. Three doses will relieve any case. For sale by Geo. W. Crouter.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A Cold Spring, Putnam County, N. Y., nun has just dislodged a horse-fly from his tympanum that had been leader of the orchestra there for two years.

—A woman employed as a stitcher in a shoe shop in North Adams, Mass., died a few days since from the effect of poison contained in the fancy colored leather on which she worked.

—A man was seared to death in Berryville, Mo. He was passing a graveyard at midnight, when two men sprang from behind a monument and shouted at him. He ran home and went to bed, but was so nervous that he could not sleep, and before morning he died in convulsions.

—An absent-minded man in Monroe, Conn., went to church the other morning with his overcoat, as he supposed, on his arm, but the laughing of the people in church directed his attention to the fact that he had taken his every-day pantaloons, and that the suspenders attached to them were dangling about his legs.

—There was a panic at the Metropolitan Theater, Sacramento, March 14. A boy, who had concealed himself in the lofts between the play surreptitiously by peeping through the ventilator, made a mistake and forced his leg through the pasteboard, large fragments of which fell over the east and lower side of the parquette. The spectators sprang to their feet and began to work their way into the aisles, and toward the doors; but as the whole ceiling did not give way and the small boy was speedily discovered, the panic was soon over and the play went on.

—The other day, as a lady of this city was passing some small boys, one of them opened his hand to display some fine agates to his companions. They looked at them admiringly, and presently one of the boys turning to the fortunate owner said: "I owe you a licking, but give me one of those agates, and I'll call it square." The little fellow looked up in the other's face, hesitated a moment, and then, selecting a marble, silently passed it over, after which all the lads went on with their play as if nothing unusual had occurred, the little marble-owner seeming to think the bargain a fair one.—Portland Press.

—At the Skaneateles, N. Y., paper-mill, the other day, Miss Sarah Gloss was engaged in sweeping about and under machinery which was revolving at a rapid rate, when, by some means unknown, her clothing became entangled in the belting, and for a moment it seemed as if the poor girl was destined to be killed. Her screams attracted the attention of a sister near by, who rushed to the rescue and succeeded in catching her, and by almost herculean strength held the devoted sister in her arms until the belting had almost torn every particle of clothing off from her. Luckily assistance came and the machinery was stopped, and Miss Gloss escaped with some slight bruises, but was badly scared.

Giving Her Census.

WHEN the census-taker rapped at the door of a certain cottage on Crawford street, the other day, and wondered if the woman would let the dog on him or douse him with dish-water, a great disappointment awaited him. She opened the door softly, smiled the sir to see if he smelled of lightning-rods, and then threw it open for him to enter.

"Madam, I am making a canvass of the city," he began.

"Ah! sit down," she replied, and as he began opening his book she continued:

"There are five of us in the family, and we paid $100 down on this place. My husband's name is Peter, his age is forty-two, and he came from a mean family. His father was always having fawning dogs around, and his mother was the greatest gossip in Elmira. Have you got that down?"

He grunted assent, and she continued:

"My name is Alvina Sarah, and I was born in——"

"I do not care to know where you was born, madam," he interrupted.

"Well, I care!" she exclaimed: "it makes a great deal of difference whether I was born in Africa or Boston, and I want it put down. As I was saying, I was born in Boston in 1836. Put down that I came of a good family."

"Madam, you don't understand—you——"

"Don't I understand that I came of a good family? I'd like to know of a Boston family which carried their noses higher than the Rogerses! Put down that my father was in the Mexican War."

"You have three children, madam?"

"I haven't any such thing, sir! Put down that my mother was killed by an explosion in a quarry. Her and father were——"

"How many children have you, madam?"

"Have you got mother down?"

"No, madam. You see, I am taking the cens us of the city."

"Well," she said, giving him a dangerous look, "I had the typhoid fever at the age of fifteen, and for weeks and weeks I hung on the edge of the grave. I here up as well as I was able, and——"

"Five in the family—how many children?" he suddenly asked.

"Put down that I here up," she commanded. "And that one night when the watchers were asleep I crept out of bed and took a drink of——"

"This is foreign to the subject, madam. How old are your children?"

"Haven't you put down that I hung on the edge of the grave?"

"No, madam."

"Aren't you going to?"

"No, madam. You see, I am simply taking the census of Detroit. I desire to ascertain——"

"You can't ascertain it here, sir!" she snapped. "If my sickness, which cost over $200, isn't good enough to go in the book then you don't get a line here!"

"Let me ask you——"

"No use asking for any of our photographs, sir! If you get 'em anywhere and put on pictures in that book we'll make it hot for you! Good-day, sir—good-day!"

He stood on the step, sighing, and she called through the door:

"My grandfather was also bitten to death by an alligator, but I won't give you any of the particulars! You want to walk?"

He passed on, sorrowfully wondering if the next woman's mother was blown off a bridge or carried down the river on a hay-stack.—Detroit Free Press.

Petrified Human Bodies.

Mr. David Whaley, of this place, buried his wife in June, 1873, in the cemetery in front of his uncle, Joseph Ritchie. He died recently and was buried on March 30 last, in his father's lot. Last Tuesday the wife's body was taken up and placed beside that of the husband. Beside the undertaker, David Seaman, and his son, there were present Mr. Joseph Ritchie, his brother, William H. Ritchie, and Mrs. Joseph Ritchie. They were astonished at the weight of the coffin, and concluded to open it. When the lid was removed they were more astonished to see the face entirely preserved and looking as natural as life. The hair had grown to twice its length at the time of death, and was of a glossy black. The skin was covered with a coating not thicker than a sheet of paper. This coating was hard and white. "You never saw snow whiter," Mr. Ritchie said. Its smoothness resembled that of wax, but it was not wax. Nobody touched it except Mr. Seaman, who rested his fingers on the forehead and fancies that the coating gave way slightly beneath his touch, and that if he had pressed hard upon it the forehead might have fallen in. He says the coating was a kind of hard mold. The eyes were as full as in life, as were also the cheeks. The clothes were dotted with black spots, but otherwise well preserved.

Dr. J. H. B. Denton was sent for to examine the remains, but was not at home. They were therefore reinterred. The coffin was of black walnut, and was uninjured, except that the finish on the outside had rotted off. In removing the lid a hammer was used, but the jar did not disturb the appearance of the body. In digging for the coffin young Mr. Seaman dug down through several feet of loam; then he struck a gravel bed and soon without much difficulty, except that the dirt had to be thrown out of the grave. The petrified bodies will be on the play surreptitiously by peeping through the ventilator, made a mistake and forced his leg through the pasteboard, large fragments of which fell over the east and lower side of the parquette. The spectators sprang to their feet and began to work their way into the aisles, and toward the doors; but as the whole ceiling did not give way and the small boy was speedily discovered, the panic was soon over and the play went on.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Honest Labor.

The artificial nature of much of our society is often discussed, and to its feverish unrest is partly ascribed the absence of those simple habits and plain ways of living which were a distinguishing feature of past generations. When we see men and women hurrying to and fro, trying to crowd in a day what it would have taken their fathers and mothers a week to accomplish, implicitly obeying the dictates of fashion, no matter how they suffer, simply because they consider themselves bound by its unwritten law, and breathing an atmosphere which is unreal and unhealthy, we are apt to moralize over the change. But what makes the question one of greater moment is that this weakness is not confined alone to adults, but that its influence is rapidly spreading amongst the young, taking away from childhood that free and unrestrained grace of movement, freshness of feeling and simplicity of manner with which poets and idealists have always associated it, and making it confined, stilted and unnatural. It is a necessary sequence that the young should take the example of their elders as a guide. They are imitative from their earliest years, if they have been brought up in rich households they have witnessed nothing but a continual round of pleasure. Their every want has been gratified and their tastes consulted, and the thought has never entered their minds that there might come a time when they would have to depend upon their own exertions, and that the tasteful accomplishments which they are possessed of would stand them in little stead. Various opinions are indulged in as to whether the human race is physically degenerating. There are some who argue, and support their assertions by proof, that we cannot now find those grand specimens of manhood and womanhood which shine in the pages of history, and look down on us from the canvas of the painter. On the other hand, observation teaches us that there still are to be seen strength and beauty, that man and women grow and flourish, and that even if they are hot-house plants, they bear within them a large share of vitality. But there is something else to be considered besides mere physical strength. We do not want simply to rear a savage race, who will "live" their lames in the sun and leap the rainbows of the brooks." An athlete may be vigorous and brutal, a beauty vain and shallow, and unless intelligence and stability of character are added to physical charms and powers, the structure is but half complete.

What we do see, however, today is an absence of those characteristics which were met with in the men and women who have left the stamp of their greatness upon our country. We do not hear of young men who will yet be heirs to fortune taking a position with road to learning, neither is there any to wealth and position. If the days of a man's life, when the faculties are ripening and when the impulses for good or evil are strongest, are allowed to slip past without an effort being made in work and exercise self-denial, ruin and disgrace will be the inevitable result.—Chicago Commercial Advertiser.

Some Japanese Customs.

The care parents give children is remarkable. You never see a child grabbed up by one arm, jerked about or struck; and fathers share in the care of the little ones. One incident illustrated their kindness. He was necessitated to visit a tea-house after lectures. It was a very busy place, and in the midst of papers of accounts the proprietor's little girl fell asleep. Although she was in the way and they had to use papers under her, she was not disturbed in her rest. Their kindness to animals is very impressive. A boy is never seen to throw a stone at a dog or bird, and crows come into the City of Tokio and lodge on the houses. They pay for their kind treatment, for they act as scavengers, picking up what rice or fish was left upon the ground.

In one of the crowded thoroughfares like that of Broadway, New York, he had seen a dog lying asleep in the middle of the road, quite undisturbed him, but carefully turned on from him. He once fired a stone at a dog to see how he would act. The animal raised his feet to let the stone pass and looked surprised, and took only the same notice of a second small pebble sent from the way a Christian dog would be likely to set. By the sides of the roads in the foot of hills stone monuments are placed and have been there for hundreds of years, bearing verses that teach consideration for dumb beasts. And that the American swears the Japanese smiles. He once dropped and broke some shells as he was going to give a lecture at which they were to be used, and asked one of the students what they would say to express their feelings. The only word that could be found corresponded with our "vexatious," hence it sounds very curious to hear the missionary's injunction. They are very considerate when we are taught these things. Why we are called by them outside barbarians one soon learns. They are very polite to each other, even their laborers, and it is rude to eat in the streets. He once saw a man in a stable give a piece of sugar to a horse. Upon inquiry he found it was a present to the animal, when men went through the park eating sweet pieces of gingerbread, spoken of as "Mad Doctor," representing herself as the daughter of the Marchioness, and acting with the consent of her ladyship's family; she represented that her mother, the Marchioness, was afflicted with insanity, and her madness was in the delusion that she was always having great parties. For instance, if musicians, the doctor, would go to her Ladyship's hotel that evening, he would find her dressed in great splendor, with the salon illuminated, adorned with flowers, and buffets covered with refreshments.

The doctor went, on the understanding that he was to obtain the proper police authority to take the Marchioness to Maison DeSante in the event of the representation made to him being confirmed by his own observation. He arrived at ten in the evening; he was the first—the only guest; and, though the Marchioness did not remember his name, she took it for granted that she had invited him, and was profusely civil. His manner puzzled and his questions startled her, and as he grew abrupt as his perception of her lunacy became more clear, she was at last offended and rang for her servants. At the same time he made the proper intimation of his police authority; and the end of the story is, that she was taken off by the doctor in hysterics, and detained as a prisoner in his asylum until the whole truth came out. All Paris was full that day, and the pretty dirt was a heroine forever. Prostrated by her unjust friend, she escaped retaliation—a British Marchioness is too grand for wit.

The Boy Who Advised.

The architect who plans high from steps to a house is in league with certain boys who have a "large and assorted stock" of uneasiness born in their natures. Proof of this can be found any day in the week in Detroit, and the latest was gathered in no later than Saturday afternoon. A very nice young man, dressed in the noblest style, and sporting a cane which never cost less than a dollar, walked up the high front steps of a Jefferson avenue mansion and pulled the bell. It was plain enough even to the driver of a street car that the young man had set an affection for some one in that house, and that he was about to meet his charmer. But, it must be said in justice to the boy who was drawing a picture of an Indian warrior on the flagstones with a piece of chalk, he followed

A printer made a young poetess say "Oh for a heart full of sweet yearlings." The poetess wrote to the editor that she meant yearnings, and that the editor was a calf. Many housewives have had heart yearnings over poor biscuits which could have been avoided by using Smith's saleratus made by the new process. Use only 3 4 the quantity you have been using of other brands.

ANOTHER DOG LAW.—Some citizens of Michigan may not yet be aware that at the last session of our State Legislature a new law taxing dogs was enacted; such, however, is the fact, and the law has gone into effect this year. The law provides that there shall be levied and collected annually upon every male dog the sum of one dollar, and upon every female dog the sum of three dollars. This tax is to be assessed by the supervisor or assessor of the township or ward in which the owner resides; and neglect or refusal on the part of such officer to perform the duties required by this act subjects him to a fine of not less than $20 or more than $100. Every person in possession of a dog, or who shall suffer a dog to remain about his house for the space of fifteen days previous to the assessment, shall be deemed the owner of such dog.

NEWS for our sportsmen. The indiscriminate slaughter of pigeons, young and old, in the Petoskey region, has come to a halt. Five parties have been arrested and fined $50 and costs each for netting the birds within less than two miles of their nesting, as forbidden by law. Not less than 400 Indians were also warned away from the nesting grounds, and made lively time when assured of the law impending in case of a failure to travel. There have been at least 1,500 persons engaged in the business there this spring, and the birds have been killed regardless of age or condition and in utter defiance of law, till the representatives of the Saginaw sportsmen's club arrived on the ground and set the officers at work. The pigeons occupy the country for 16 miles one way and from four to six the other.

THE war-cloud is deepening. A Vienna correspondent telegraphs that all negotiations have failed, and that it is a question only of days for an outbreak of war between England and Russia. Unless negotiations shall have reached a more satisfactory stage than can now be hoped for, there is good authority for believing that the English government has sold its last word, and that its policy now is to continue to strengthen its forces and prepare for war.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage dated the 15th day of December, A. D. 1874, made and executed by Mary Ann Damp, to Newton A. Balch, of Charlevoix County, Mich., and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 30th day of December, A. D. 1874, in Liber one of Mortgages, on page 264, which Mortgage was duly assigned by the said Newton A. Balch to Lydia Smith and Rachel S. Smith, of Ann Arbor, Michigan, on the 3d day of February, 1877, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan aforesaid, in Liber One of Mortgages, on page 435, on which Mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Hundred and Sixteen Dollars and thirty-three cents, and no attorney's fee of thirty dollars provided for in said Mortgage, and no proceedings at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

Now therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided; Notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 15th day of May, A. D. 1878, at two o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at the Court House in the village of Charlevoix, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix is held) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with seven per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of thirty dollars provided for therein; the premises being described in said mortgage as the south half of the north west quarter of Section Fourteen (14) in Township Thirty-two (32) North, of Range Five (5) West, containing Eighty (80) acres, per United States survey.

LYDIA SMITH,
RACHEL S. SMITH,
Assignees of Mortgagee.

NOTICE.

U. S. INTERNAL REVENUE SPECIAL TAX.

Under the Revised Statutes of the United States, Sections 3232, 3237, 3238, and 3239, every person engaged in any business, occupation or employment, which renders him liable to a special tax, is required to procure and place and keep conspicuously in his establishment or place of business a stamp denoting the payment of said special tax for the special tax year beginning May 1, 1878. Section 3244, Revised Statutes, designates who are liable to special tax. A return, as prescribed on Form 11, is also required by law of every person liable to special tax as above. Severe penalties are prescribed for non-compliance with the foregoing requirements, or for continuing in business after April 30, 1878, without payment of tax.

Application should be made to S. S. BAILEY, Collector of Internal Revenue, at Grand Rapids, Mich.

Apple Trees $8 per 100.

For 30 days I will sell a block of apple trees at the Nursery that are too large to box, or bundle, at the low price of $8 per 100. Bring your wagons and help dig and select to suit yourself.

I will furnish teams to deliver at the dock free of charge.

I have an immense stock of extra fine 3 and 4 years old apple trees of all the leading hardy varieties which I will sell at $14 per 100 boxed and delivered at the boat. I sell out none but sound large thrifty trees, six to seven feet high.

This nursery had no connection with the inferior stock delivered around the country a few years ago by one Adams.

I have more good trees than all other nurseries together in the Traverse region and will sell as low at any time as good trees can be grown for.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan County of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate Office, in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 24th day of January A. D. 1878.

Present, J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Newton Youmans, praying that a certain instrument now on file in this County, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that Addie W. Hayes may be appointed executor thereof. Thereupon, it is ordered, that Saturday, the 23d day of February next at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, there to be holden, at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be printed in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

J. MILO EATON, Judge of Probate.

Notice.

To the members of the Republican County Committee:

You are hereby notified that there will be a meeting of the committee at the Town Hall, in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 24th inst., at twelve o'clock M., for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of calling a convention to appoint a delegate to the State Convention, that meets in the city of Detroit on the 13th day of June. Also to arrange the appointment of representation of the several townships on the convention for the nomination of county officers, and to make some provisions for the appointment of delegates to the Congressional, Senatorial and Representative Conventions, and any other business that may properly be considered by them for the advancement of the cause of the good old party in Charlevoix county. A full attendance is desirable. The towns of Hudson, Spring vale, Bear Lake, Melrose and Hayes having been organized, since the appointment of the county committee have in consequence no appointed members of the committee; therefore the chairman of the committee would suggest that each of the new towns appoint a good man to meet and consult with the other members. ROBERT MILLER.

Charlevoix, May 10, 1878. Chairman.

THE Gazelle is expected daily.

A SNOW storm Friday morning, last.

S. S. LISCOMB has removed his jewelry establishment to the Chamberlain building.

THE Township Board of Charlevoix have fixed the bonds of liquor dealers and druggists at $3,000.

A lady of Charlevoix recently passed a trade dollar for a "three dollar silver piece," at an establishment in town, and got her "right change back," too.

HARRISON MILLER came from Beaver Island Thursday, for the purpose of putting down a post duct near the north point.

REMEMBER you can buy Building Hardware, doors and windows very reasonable of Carpenter & Bartholomew.

DIED.—Another old settler of this region has passed from life. Mrs. Samuel Horton, of Evangeline, died on the 7th. She has resided in this county for 22 years.

—Alonzo, a young son of Andrew Nowland, who was living with Perry Beswith, at Elk Rapids, died last week of diptheria.

—Paul Wood, an old resident of Banks, died on Thursday, of inflammation of the Bowels.

DO NOT fail to call at the "ready pay" store of Carpenter & Bartholomew's before making your purchases. They can save you money.

THE Charlevoix Sentinel has just entered upon its 10th volume. It seems scarcely possible that well printed and well filled paper has existed for ten years past in the extreme northwestern part of the lower peninsula but such is the fact. And the paper was never better edited and never better deserved than it does to day, the strong support which, we are glad to note, it is receiving.

I. O. G. T.—The following are the list of officers installed May 10th, for the quarter ending July 21st, 1878:

W. C. T.—P. Miller.
W. V. T.—Mary Barry.
W. Sec.—W. E. McLennan.
W. A. S.—Alice Carpenter.
W. F. S.—A. Buttars.
W. T.—Kate Carpenter.
W. M.—John McNabe.
W. D. M.—Lottie Mason.
W. I. G.—Mary Whitman.
W. O. G.—H. J. Worthington.
W. Chap.—Mrs. Green.
W. R. H. S.—Jennie VanDusen.
W. L. H. S.—Ester Buttars.

A good stock of everything at Carpenter & Bartholomew's as close as they can be bought and sold for ready pay.

A SHIM AND A CLIMB.—Sam See and Jack Ingalls were Thursday engaged in sawing off the piles of the bridge sub structure below water, and were working on a cedar lighter fastened across the stream. It was fastened, one end to the pile upon which the gentlemen were working, and the other was held by a line from the shore to the lower side of the lighter. As Jack was spinning a yarn as long as his legs, the upper side of the lighter settled below the surface of the water and hastily went "on her beam's ends." Sam undertook to unfasten the line and let the float right up, but failed, and was left to swim ashore, which he did. Of course the spectators had a laugh at Sam's expense, at the same time being conscious of his danger. Rather than swim Jack took to a pile, which stood ten feet above the water. The ludicrousness of his appearance, with his numerous secrets of legs wrapt around that maple pile, and his struggles to reach the top, were better than any circus. He reached the top in time to launch an invective at the innocent head of our reporter, who stood upon the shore, note-book in hand. As the notes of Jack's voice died away, we heard another sound upon the side-walk, which was like "schwlash! schwlash! schwlash!" and the retreating figure of Sam passed down over the hill to change his clothes.

Marine.

—The following named vessels left this port yesterday—Mariner, H. Each, Nellie Winteck, M. N. Dunham and Alaska for Milwaukee—Geo. W Prescott for Kenosha—Hercules for Racine—all loaded with wood and bark—Now in Port Elgin, Maple Leaf and Emma.

WE shall receive by the Fountain City this week our spring stock of dry goods, clothing, hats and caps. We intend to show the people of Charlevoix as nice a stock of dry goods and clothing that was ever brought to this town.

FOX, ROSE & BUTTARS.

Personal.

—Archie Buttars went to Chicago, on the Fountain City, Friday

—Geo. T. J. Thorp and family arrived here on the Fountain City Friday evening.

—Miss Inwood, Thurlow Weed and wife came in on the Menominee Sunday from Cheboygan.

—A. K Dougherty, was here last week from Elk Rapids, and his family returned here with him. Mr. Dougherty's people have by no means left Charlevoix permanently, and our people will look anxiously forward to the day when they shall again enjoy their society.

CHARLEVOIX SUMMER RESORT.—The Committee of Michigan and Indiana gentlemen recently appointed to settle the business features of the Resort question arrived here Wednesday morning, and consisted of H. W. Page, S. A. Gibson and F. M. Lyon, of Kalamazoo, and Messrs Carter and Gordon, of Fort Wayne Ind. The Committee remained during the day, and made a thorough examination and survey of the proposed Resort. Each member of the Committee expressed himself highly pleased with the location and there is no doubt that the matter is definitely settled. We are informed by the Committee that improvements will be commenced upon the grounds within one month and several cottages erected.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 23d, the amendment of the House to the bill granting a pension to Gen. James Shields, increasing the amount from fifty dollars to $100 a month, was referred. The House bill to prohibit the coinage of the twenty-cent silver piece was passed. The bill to extend the time for the completion of the Texas Pacific railroad, as further considered, and several amendments were agreed to, after which the bill as amended was passed, without division. In the House, the Speaker ordered the printing of the summary message of the River and Harbor bill to be read. Mr. Conger objected to words referring to alleged combination of members for the application of the Treasury, and Mr. Van (N. Y.) withdrew that portion of the protest, and proceeded to address the House, to which objection was made, and, after considerable tumult and confusion, Mr. Conger put the question as to whether the gentleman from New York should be allowed to proceed, and declared it carried—181 to 87. Mr. Conger also objected to words in the protest declaring that "Any such appropriation is one of the despite minimum limits by reason of the failure of the road; appropriating $5,500 for erecting a monument to the memory of Thomas Jefferson; three bills were introduced and referred to the House; to prevent the insurance of railroad companies from settling aside the contract entered into between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Credit Mobilier, repealing the limitation of the Statute of Limitations in favor of certain settlers on Indian lands within the double minimum limits; to repeal the railroad grant, and afterward the reservation out of the double

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, May 10, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

The death of John Morrissey, on Wednesday, aroused to occasion a good deal of genuine sorrow, both public and private. The newspapers all had words of regret in chronicling it, the city flags were placed at half mast, and the tenor of individual comment was everywhere favorable to the deceased. The event could was certainly a surprise, the wonder being that human vitality could have borne on so long under a complication of incurable diseases. Ever since the election last year, he wisely husbanded the remnant of his already ebbing strength in his successful struggle to beat Augustus Schell, Mr. Morrissey has been practically shunned. That last struggle was in one respect like Samson's in the temple. It pulled down the two pillars of Tammany and crushed his opponents, but it involved Morrissey in his own ruin.

It is curious and interesting to see the various grades of moralizing over Morrissey in which the press have indulged, ranging from the "goody—goody" style, in which horror of the prize fighter predominates, up to a sort of lay sermon of the hard hitting Senator's "rugged virtues," as many delight to call them. The truth, as usual, lies somewhere between these extremes. The career of the dead man was quite out of usual order, and still he was by no means a remarkable character. He had a great deal of energy, and enough ability to raise above the obscurity in which he was born. I am afraid, however, that his muscle was practically the largest element in his ability. But that not given him the sharp and general penetrancy which attaches to the pugilist, it is questionable whether his later course would have attracted very much attention. His regeneration of the prize ring glorified him to the sentimentalists, so that his assumption of respectability was encouraged, and his political advancement hastened with utter disregard of the fact that this apparent reform sprung so little from quickened morality, that he immediately became a gambler and pool seller, and remained such to the end of his days. In politics his merits can be briefly summed up. He would not steal, and he stuck by his friends like General Grant himself. On the other hand, he was a thorough partisan he never originated any valuable legislation, and he never rose in political or proper above the ward politician. He seemed to me a sort of human mastiff, full of force, courage, and fidelity, but with hardly more decency or true moral sense than the latter.

The telegraph has given us the opening ceremonies and scenes of the French Exhibition which is designed to leave all its predecessors behind in magnificence as well as time. The formal throwing open of the mammoth Fair be the Chief Executive of the French nation, assisted by three heirs apparent to the thrones of neighboring countries, and the ex-sovereign of a fourth, is hurried by description as having been most imposing. Of course no particulars of the exhibits have been received as yet but the general tone of the messages after making due allowance for the pardonable patriotic bias of our correspondents, gives satisfactory assurance that Uncle Sam, notwithstanding his tardy preparations, makes quite a satisfactory showing. The main exhibit from our shores that the telegraph has specified thus far, is the immense display of Howe tesles, which, having swept the honors at every previous Exposition, have gone into this one more magnificently than ever. Their victory is a foregone conclusion, and I only wish I could say the same regarding all the rest of the American delegation.

It is an edifying spectacle to see the eager haste of a large class of small merchants, brokers, etc. to get into the friendly embrace of the bankrupt law before that convenient piece of legislation shall be wiped from the national statute book. The District Court here is kept busy from morning till night filing the papers of a hurrying throng intent upon embracing what may be their last chance to get a coat of financial whitewash and be able hereafter to smile sweetly in the face of an army of swindled and wrathful but utterly hopless creditors. An absence of all insolvent laws would doubtless work occasional individual humanity unfortunate men sufer, failing with no suspicion of trickery, would be unable to get a formal discharge, but it would put a stop to an enormous amount of morality in the way of fraudulent bankruptcies. The action of Congress in the matter is awaited with much anxiety.

The Gilbert Elevated railroad, about which there has been, perhaps, more bitter fighting than about any previous enterprise in New York, is at last a fixed fact—a double-track road being completed to 59th street. A trial trip was made over it on Tuesday last, by its officers and invited guests, who rolled smoothly over its whole length amid a general waving of hats and handkerchiefs along the route. The road has been quite popular as it approached completion, and I believe the proportion of its original obstructionists is small who would now be glad to see it taken away. It will not be open to the public for some weeks to come.

General John C. Fremont, the almost successful opponent of Buchanan in the Presidential campaign of 1856, is generally supposed to be a very rich man. A dozen years ago he was rich, his property was currently estimated at something like a million. Within the last few years, however, his resources have been failing, until now, when he and his family have been reported to be in actual want. He is said to have sought employment in vain, and finally to have been obliged to accept the assistance of friends in getting some minor appointment by which he could earn a living. Such rumors are generally exaggerated, and this one probably forms no exception to the rule; but the undoubted fact of the poverty and difficulties of a man who, twenty years ago, came near to ruling the nation, and who a short time since was the possessor of wealth and high social position, is a prominent exemplification of the vicissitudes possible in the lives of humanity in general, and of Americans in particular.

Mr James Gordon Bennett having gloriously explored Africa, is now going to penetrate—also by proxy—to the North Pole. As your readers may have heard, he has purchased a steam yacht especially for the purpose, and is now fitting it up for the rigorous journey. Old "Jack" Cole, Mr. Bennett's old and tried yachtsman, has just received orders by cable to go over to Europe immediately, to take charge of the new craft.

Apropos of the North Pole. An enterprising rural scientist has applied for permission to accompany a government expedition in that direction, for the purpose of demonstrating by personal experience the theory of his that the world is hollow and that interior, which is entirely habitable can be reached through openings at the polls. That's a nice theory, and its promulgation is especially opportune, for Canada is getting uncomfortably full of our absconding defaulters, who were beginning to look around uneasily for some other place where extradition papers cannot follow them. They will doubtless hail the discovery of a new and safe refuge.

The sudden and mysterious departure of Wm H. Vanderbilt, for Europe, last week, is coupled with the fact of the recent sale of the Erie Railroad, and it is surmised as more than probable that he will assume control of the New Construction Company, which was first summer tendered him by the English bondholders. This would give him the entire management of the two great lines leading to New York, and would make him virtual dictator over many thousands of men and $275,000,000 of value.

RADIX.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the Liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. For sale by Geo. W. Crouter.

The Rev. John Russell has called his annual Prohibition State Convention to meet at Lansing June 12 to nominate a State ticket.

Lately four citizens of Grand Island were playing a game of poker—five cent "ante"—in a well known saloon of that place. A dispute arose as to the game, when one of the party made use of an expression about as follows: "I hope Christ will kill me if it isn't so." He had dealt the cards, and the betting on the hand was over, when he passed the pack to the next man to deal. The dealer shuffled the cards and handed them back to the man to cut them, at the same time giving him a light slap to attract his attention. The man did not move. He was found to be stone dead.—Omaha Bee.

Some of the Muskegon mills are already running night and day, and are cutting as much lumber as possible. The merchants expect a good season.

A Workingman's Quarter in London.

THERE are corners of London which spring and sunshine never touch; gloomy alleys and smoky lanes which, although perhaps decently clean, give the stranger the impression that they are squalid and unwholesome. Tired of the crowd in Regent street the other day, and of the crying echoes in the motley toilets of the women shopping on the famous avenue, I turned aside to the right, and after five minutes' rapid walking, could have imagined myself 200 miles from the West End. I had entered upon a wilderness of narrow lanes, where the small, unremunerated houses were crowded together as by some patent squeezing process. Frowzy children frolicked and gambolled in the dirt, or ran with pitchers to the public house for beer. It was the dinner hour of the working class, and from north, south, east and west came long processions of underfed operatives, nearly all young, dowdy and melancholy. The girls presented a sad spectacle. Their language was more than free. Whatever womanliness they may have at some remote period possessed had been swept away by association with rough boors in the street, and in the squalid little houses in which they are doomed to live. There seemed no grace, no charm—not one atom of poetry in these starveling lives. Smoke hung in cloudy pall above the roofs of the dwellings, and in some blind passageway or dark angle where streets met there was a blackness as of night. The men and women living in these sinks and stews have but one source of amusement, the "public house." This institution is represented as managed with a view to the prevention of abuses, but it seems to me to be open just so it should be closed. Were it hermetically closed when it should be open Sunday evening at six o'clock, if I take a walk through this sooty and smoky section, I shall see these operatives whom I have just described waiting in long lines to be let into the dingy compartments of the "public." There they will remain as long as their means will permit—men and women sitting together in the reeking atmosphere, and only arising to stumble home through the gloom to dull rooms filled with dampness. Perhaps, too, I shall see groups of drunken women, fallen on the threshold of the "public," or dashing out in striking of unsuspecting husbands endeavor to convey them home. It is not an uncommon sight.

The district into which I strayed by accident must not be taken for a slum, or some lost and diseased section. It is merely a sample of acres on acres of houses in mighty London. It is guarded well, and one's purse and head are perfectly safe. On every third or fourth corner stands the policeman, tall, handsome, well-uniformed and obliging. But one looks in vain for the large school-house, with its cheerful yard, which is to be found everywhere in Germany and America; it was for some picturesque corner where a fountain, a cathedral and a massive portal inquire the soul with their beauties in vain for some elegant home, which demonstrates that the workman has made progress and is happy. The shops are mean and shabby; a market place, although clean, has an uninviting air; the butcher boy scrubs the shelves with soap and water, but the meats and fish are so arranged that one revolts at the thought of partaking of them. Frowsy women in shabby gowns and plaited straw hats wander disconsolately about with baskets, chaffering, while unwashed children cling howling to their skirts. Lodging houses with mysterious entrances announce therein bed and board on small signs, as if the proprietors were too modest to affront the public eye. The coffee-house is plunged in gloom. There are even little half curtains to exclude such light as might by chance have crept in, had the windows been left unguarded. There and there is a little "foreign hotel," around whose doors dried and wizened old men in smelly coats lower with anxious air like sea gulls about a steamer. These are the drift of exile and of crime—refugees from a dozen climes—broken branches from the parent trees, strayed into the London whirlpool and carried round and round until it is time to go—down! Everyone in all this labyrinth of streets seems to have a little, and to devote to one object, and that object is beer. The air is redolent of beer. Beer is the god of the locality. Its praises are set forth in flaming posters. And if there were a huge building anywhere in this vicinity it would wager that it is a brewery. On a dampier and colder night than the usual foggy and chilly ones, the population indulges in "hot beer." With such wretched consolation do they eke out their aimless and miserable lives.

There is no color in any of the faces of the people in this section, unless it be the bloom bestowed by drink. A dull pallor is set upon the cheeks. Early death is written upon hundreds of brows. But the most discouraging feature in the contrast which it is easy to discover on every visage. These people know no better existence, and they consequently care for none better. For them no lectures courses exist, in which they can be instructed and fascinated, church is a vague formality, good enough for wealthy folk, but not worth much to the poor; the theater is a pleasure which they take greedily, when they are not too tired by their long day's work to go to it; but their main idea of enjoyment is the gratification of the grosser senses. And there seems no restraining influence: the wages are without scale, and uncommonly small; degradation is large.

Deep Mining Shafts.

The Chalier-Savage-Norcross shaft has reached a perpendicular depth of a depth of 2,960 feet, and is now without doubt the deepest perpendicular shaft in America. It still lacks, however, 340 feet of having reached as great a perpendicular depth as the famous shaft of the Savage or Imperial Consolidated inclines. If continued downward until the west wall of the Comstock lode is reached, it will have attained a depth of not far from 3,500 feet, and will then be one among the deepest—if not the deepest—perpendicular mining shafts in the world. Over a year ago the Adelbert shaft, sunk on a silver-lead mine in Prisbram, Bohemia, had reached a perpendicular depth of 3,280 feet, and is, probably the deepest perpendicular shaft in the world. That is a very old mine, its workings dating back to the year 1500 or more. The attainment of that depth was celebrated at the time by the striking off of a large number of commemorative silver medals of the value of a florin each. There are other mines, however, where greater depths have been attained than at the Adelbert shaft, but not in a perpendicular line. One of these is in the coal mines of Victor Remus, in Belgium, where, by sinking and then boring, a depth of 3,542 feet has been reached. Another is the Rock Salt Bore hole, near Sperenberg, not far from Berlin, Prussia, which, a few years ago, had reached a perpendicular depth of 4,175 feet. The deepest bore hole in the world is probably the artesian spring at Potsdam, in Missouri, which has a depth of 5,500 feet.—Gold Hill (Nev.) News.

An Ex-Old Maid's Advice to Girls.

But such marriages as mine are not to be expected or even hoped for. It must be exceedingly rare for a woman of forty years old to meet a man whose age, taste, habits and position in their marriage a promise of happiness to both. Such a marriage is to be gratefully rejoiced over if it comes, but it is possible to be happy and useful without it. What I mean to impress on the girls, whom I write to-day, is that they should make themselves able to stand alone. I'll quote Margaret Fuller's words on that subject to them. With self-support possible, unhappy years in the paternal home and many unhappy marriages will be prevented, a happy single life will be made possible, and a happy marriage will be more probable. Concise directions? If I gave any they would be like this:

1. Don't waste any time waiting for "him."

2. Don't spend quite as much as you earn.

3. To prevent narrowness, master some branch of knowledge not connected with your occupation.

4. To keep your heart warm, love somebody's children. If possible contribute yourself with their care or education.

5. When married women confide their troubles to you—and strange to say they will do it much oftener than they confide them to each other—don't let it give you a dark view of married life or of masculine human nature.—Golden Rule.

THE Batchelor Brothers have been missing gold fish from their tank for some time. A watch was set to catch the thieves, who were supposed to be boys. Yesterday the cat which belongs to the store was seen to approach the tank, and, watching its opportunity, quickly reached for and drew out one of the golden beauties, and made its dainty meal unseenly. Poser's claws will be cut and the tank covered.—Utah (N. Y.) Herald.

The average of misdirected letters sent up to this Department is over 500 a day; the day I was there last it ran up to about 1,000. The most difficult of these go to Mr. Stone, who is called the "blind man," perhaps because he can decipher an inscription that is utterly illegible to any other man in America. His most difficult cases are the foreign letters. Here is a letter directed to "Sandnik," which he makes out to be Sandy Hook. Sometimes the arrangement of the name and address is curious.

For Mr. Thomas
Smith, Bridge
port post-office
Conn. America

is very plain when you once understand that it is "For Mr. Thomas Smith, Bridgeport, Conn., America." But when a man says "Hulo," how is anybody but a blind man to know that he means 6667 Ohm letter reads, "Bet Feet Rue de Agua." Now the blind man knows that "Rue de Agua" is Spanish for Water street, and that there is a Water street in New Bedford, Mass. "Lysram, Warner Co.," he translates into Luzerna, Warren Co., and "Common County, P. A." is made into Cameron County, Pa. But who would guess that "Orern C. Ii. Lourey," in one line, means that it is to go to Auburn, in search of C. D. L.? One letter is directed to "Knustanzer Brauerei, S. L. Amerika." Mr. Stone soon discovered that the Consumers' Brewery is at Stapleton, Staten Island, and the letter is sent there. He reads "Ivo" into Iowa, and "to Pella in Yomah" he makes to go to Pella, in the same State. Nor does Ohio get off with one miss. Here is one letter that wants to go to "Stadt Hoh Zonsonani, Strasse 15," which is, to the State of Ohio, Cincinnati, Street 15. But that is not all. This other one wants us to reach the same city, but it has a bad spell of another kind, for its direction runs "Solizany." And then "Pizo Burg Mssessip," is sent to Vicksburg, Michigan is spelled "mutting." "Glass works Berkshire" is sent to Hinsdale, in Berkshire County, Massachusetts, where there is a glass factory. But the hardest one I saw was addressed to "John Hermann Schirman." In one line, with the wonderful word "Snaguekaunda," for the rest. Mr. Stone cut the word in two, and read it "Chautauqua County," while he translated the whole into "John Hermann, Sherman P. O., Chautauqua County, N. Y.

But there are some which even a blind man cannot make out. One letter in rather a good handwriting is very vaguely addressed to

"Yoo much of this.
From your affectionate son.
"Anon Hammerick."

In this case the clairvoyant power has been copied exactly by some one who did not understand the language. Instead of reading this, there is really too little. But here is a case where the top of the letter has been imperfectly copied in the same fashion. It reads: "Tuesday Evening, Send American."

If Tuesday Evening should see this article, he will know that his letter has come back again to Europe.—Edward Eggleston, in Scribner for May.

Poor, but Not Proud.

"I'm as poor as free-lunch turtle-soup, but I don't glory in it," said a week-end waif of trouble, with a mouth like the other of an old stocking, as he sat down on a bench among the parrots in Washington Park, the other morning.

"Merciful Moses!" exclaimed a sparse-haired mendicant, whose back hadn't carried a new coat for seven years, "show me the man as does, an' he kin take my share, cheap!"

Trouble has followed me like a shadder from the start, and there never was a time when I was any more free from misfortune than I am of grayhacks at this minute, but I don't go round with a tin horn an' a banner, tellin' the world I'm poor, do I?"

The waif edged up around him and listened, with open mouths.

"I say I don't flaunt my poverty," he continued. "I'm not proud of it, nor ashamed of it, as some fools be, as I don't crow over them as is better off, nor make brags that I have many friends an' less to eat than any other living soul."

"No more do I," put in a man with a face that had been a stranger to water. "I grins an' bears it."

"Joe's turkey was a fat bird to the side of me, but what's the good of my puttin' on airs? It won't make feathers grow on a station-house plank, will it? An' ain't bonsin' about my misery put another loan in my soup or fill my stomach any more to do. Nary time, it can't. Cometh never put a full spoon to anybody's mouth. Ananias Ever got plenty of rope if I wanted to brag, but that ain't my natur."

"Lots more affected as can be hit with the same pole," chimed in a thin man with a tight belt.

"Yes, maybe; but if you'll hold your breath you'll say less," resumed the first speaker. "There was Lazarus, now, look at him. He was poor enough to be respectable, by an odds, but I discount him, boys, I do heavy. He had sores that was intlein' to a full pack of dogs, but you couldn't find a scab big enough for a pup to smell of before its eyes were open; an' then again, you can't prove he didn't own the hounds himself! Don't backsade to kick my own dog? Well, I should say not! Poverty, boys, is my best bolt, it's the only thing in this world I ever had plenty of; but, as I said before, I don't flaunt it around and glory in it, nor I don't y'arn for any more of it. Poor? You couldn't find fat enough about me to grease a watch!"—Cincinnati Breakfast Table

The Queen of Tramps.

Mrs. Mary Merriman is a respectable appearing woman of thirty, is well-bred looking, and has every appearance of being upright and of good character. She is, however, better described as the queen of female tramps, and can discount the great majority of male tramps. She is not a genuine tramp—not of the regular kind who are a terror to the country, and "work" cities and towns in a systematic manner, having their gates and door-post signs, etc., for of these she knows nothing, and with this class of people she does not associate, for the Party is society to her, but she likes the business. She was born in St. Albans, in this State, and her folks were farmers. She has since lived in Hermon with her brother, Joseph Merriman, who does a good deal of trading in this city. Three years ago this fall she took it into her head to see the country, and started out with neither scrip nor staff, but a good pair of thick shoes. She walked across the country, leaving all kinds of weather, and finally brought up in Clinton, Iowa, when she struck back trade and returned to this city. Two days ago she decided to start out again and this time selected a bigger route. She went through part of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, and on to Washington, where she remained a few days and "did the Capitol," and then made a bolt for Savannah, Ga., where she remained a short time. Then on she went again, doing the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Iowa, Indiana, and finally got round to Kansas City, Mo. Here she stopped awhile and carried a new tramping outfit. Again she started, this time with the intention of crossing the plains to California, but finally stopped when told by many persons that it would be very hard work for her to think of tramping it alone. She then started on a seven days' trip, walking from Kansas City to Chicago, thence to Detroit, doing Niagara Falls, crossing to Canada, thence to New York and through Massachusetts, arriving at her home in Hermon a little more than a week ago. She says she averages twenty-six miles a day. She says when she gets tired and out of clothes she finds no trouble in getting a few days' work, and in this manner enjoys her life.—Bangor (Me.) Commercial.

Hearing and Smell in Insects.

All that I have observed leads me to believe that any equilibrium which insects to sound is due to a diffused sensibility to vibration rather than to a differential sense like our own. If, at any one, an hour after his kitchen has been left in darkness and quiet, will enter it as soon as possible, without shoes or light, and then, having no contact with anything, other than the unavoidable one of his sock-muffled feet with the floor, will speak audibly and sharply. I believe he will find that out a cockroach shows any signs of alarm. If, on the other hand, he should drop something heavy abruptly, or enter with his usual step in boots, there is a stampede; but then nothing is to compare with the commotion caused by the introduction of light.

As to smell, there can be no doubt, it seems to me, that it is a very finely differentiated sense; residing, I suspect, to a great extent, in the antennæ, and probably capable of detecting qualities in substances of which our own analogous sense gives us no warning. The ichneumon flies are an example in point. One of the larger of these alighted inside my open window in the sunshine this afternoon, and I noticed, from time before, the incessant play of his antennæ as he hunted restlessly to and fro, apparently in search of larvæ, or eggs, concealed under the wood. As the prey of some members of this tribe are always so hidden, and the egg is sometimes laid from a position at the long oviposittor, without the aid of sight, some other sense, in great perfection, must guide them in their quest. But here is a quite conclusive instance.

I saw in Athens March, 1883 in the collection of Mr. Merlin, then our Vice Consul there, placed in juxtaposition in one drawer in his cabinet, a wasp and spider, of which he told me that that species of spider is the habitual prey of that species of wasp, and that he hunts him by scent, nose down, precisely like a hound. He witnessed himself the chase from beginning to end in the case of the actual specimens I saw. It occurred in his own house, and was continued for some time and across several apartments, more than one room. The spider, as soon as he found himself tracked by nobody's mouth, knew very well what it portended. My Morton had no intentions of having anything to do with him, as it was with Lincoln—and no one could ever induce him to get his coupe varnished or make his old overhaul off for a horse. One day his driver left him and he engaged a new one. The first time the new man made his appearance he wore a livery he had brought from his former service, but Mr. Morton would not enter the carriage until the negro had taken off the cockade from his hat and put on a suit of ordinary clothes. He used to say that livery was a badge of servitude. Fernando Wood drives a mammoth pair of bay horses, with a gold-mounted harness covered all over with his monogram. His carriage is a lumbering evidence of respectability.—Washington Cor. Buffalo Commercial.

Washington Celebrities on the Road.

Nowhere in the world are there better pavements for driving within the city limits, and in the country round about are some delightful drives, which are well patronized on pleasant days, and one may meet in the hours between the close of business and dark nearly all the notables of official and social Washington.

President Hayes and his wife are seldom prevented from taking their daily drive between four and seven o'clock, and only in the most stormy weather are they missed from the boulevard. The President's horses were a matter of much concern during the first few months of his administration. Rogers bought them of a livery-stable keeper in Alexandria, and, as is usual, was imposed upon. They were ill-matched, and were a disgrace to the Nation a hundred hacks in Washington were drawn by better pairs. Last fall, however, after suffering much ridicule, the President purchased the present pair of another pair, and an educated horseman prepared them for him in Kentucky. They are handsome, well-matched, easy-traveling grays.

President Grant, as almost everybody knows, used to drive a four-in-hand, before a dog-cart, and it was a familiar sight to see him sitting on the box, with his habitual cigar, driving his own team in the country. Grant was averse to making himself conspicuous. He drove for the pleasure of it and not for display, and never cared to meet the fashionable streets with his four-in-hand, but always took a back street and as little company as possible. Over the well-traveled country road Grant's skill as a horseman is National, and it required an accomplished driver to manage his team.

Senator Conkling drives a fine, large black horse, which he calls "Douglass," being a light, narrow, Brewster buggy, and generally alone. When the Senate adjourns, "Douglass" is generally waiting for his master at the east front of the Capitol, and takes a stretch of six or eight miles before dinner.

Senator Burnside drives a handsome pair of bays, large and fine horses of Irish jaunting-car, and is fond of having a young lady by his side.

Senator Cameron has quite a stud of horses and good taste in matters of equipage. His favorite "outfit" is a dog-cart, a pair of fast bays he has, and a daughter of his pair alike. Cameron is an accomplished horsewoman, as is Miss Bayard also.

The Russian Minister has a mammoth pair of bays, with a great, lumbering chariot, on which are spread the coats-of-arms of his own and his wife's family. He and Mme. Stiskin are every estimable, unassuming people, and put on less style than any of the other foreigners. They are to be seen walking every day, plainly dressed, and stopping to kiss little children that they meets in the streets. Having kissed them, she runs after her German and jabbers Russian at him till he smiles and looks back at the child his wife has kissed. Then his entire face is full grins of their own, and for that time the carriage is mostly devoted.

The Foreign Ministers all have stylish turn-outs, and, during last especially, are on the drives every pleasant day. Sir Edward Thornton has a handsome pair of clipped chestnuts, which he drives before an elegant barouche, but he generally prefers walking himself, and is one of the most constant pedestrians in Washington. His walking-shoes are a curiosity. The soles are broad and made in the English style, and are fully half an inch thick. The uppers are of goat skin, tied with leathern thongs.

Mme. Schurman takes his daily drive in an open carriage, drawn by two ordinary-looking horses. Every day about noon or twelve, if the weather is pleasant, you can see Mrs. Sherman waiting for her husband, at one of the entrances to the Treasury Department, and as he is very methodical, his appearance at the door every day is as regular as the clock strikes four.

Corcoran, the banker and philanthropist, drives a pair of small, jogging bays before a comfortable carriage, bringing very low to the ground, which was made at his order because his rheumatic limbs refuse to enter a high carriage. Senator Morton's old coupe is missed from the streets. Every day of his life in Washington it could be seen standing either at the Ebbitt House, or at the White House, or the Capitol, or some one of the Departments, and it carried him faithfully for many years. It was low, the box reaching down to within an inch or so of the curbstone, and was made expressly for him. It was scratched and battered and worn, and the horse he drove before it was one of the forlornest specimens of animal life that was ever seen. He was old and sad and ugly, and the repairs it had undergone were well advertised. Mr. Morton had a peculiar suffering for anything pretentious—it was almost antipathy with him, as it was with Lincoln—and no one could ever induce him to get his coupe varnished or make his old overhaul off for a horse. One day his driver left him and he engaged a new one. The first time the new man made his appearance he wore a livery he had brought from his former service, but Mr. Morton would not enter the carriage until the negro had taken off the cockade from his hat and put on a suit of ordinary clothes. He used to say that livery was a badge of servitude. Fernando Wood drives a mammoth pair of bay horses, with a gold-mounted harness covered all over with his monogram. HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—In the spring and summer cultivate your farms—in the winter, cultivate yourself.—Ibid.

—It is intelligent labor which enables us to make the most of our resources.—Iowa State Register.

—Do not put all spring work on the farm, because it is not planting time by the almanac.—Prairie Farmer.

—Cream Pie—One pint sweet cream, the whites of two eggs, well beaten; sweeten to the taste with pulverized sugar. One crust.

—Custard Pudding—One quart of sweet milk, three eggs and two-thirds of a cupful of sugar; grate nutmeg on top. Bake slowly till solid.

Macaroons—One and one-quarter pounds powdered sugar, one pound sweet almonds, bleached and pounded to a paste, whites of six eggs, grated peel of two lemons.

The farmers most likely to pay ton much for farm hands are those who pay the least to cheap, inferior hands. Those are the only class who receive too much pay.—State Register.

—Onion Soup.—Cut into pieces twelve onions; boil them in three quarts of milk and water, pinally mixed; add a little veal, season with butter and pepper; add a few well-toasted slices of white bread and a handful of finely chopped parsley.

—High farming means making better use of our resources—hiring more intelligent hands—using the best tools —sowing the improved seed—keeping the best breeds of hogs, cattle, horses; sheep, etc.—keeping our soil in the best condition by rotation and manuring, and having everything guided by intelligence and energy.—Iowa State Register.

—There is no difficulty in having a flower garden—a few moments each day will keep it in order, if not too large; and even a few square feet of land planted with a good selection of flowers, all of which can be secured at trifling cost, will give flowers every day from early spring until late autumn, and will also be a constant source of pleasure.

—Tinned Ware.—And now the Scientific American warns the public against tinned ware, the tin used in its manufacture nowadays being largely adulterated with lead, in consequence of which the "tinned" ware loses its original brightness, while the lead lurks above the general level. Plant from eight to ten seeds in a hill. When up, thin to two plants and cultivate light. If bugs trouble the vines, dissolve gum camphor in water and sprinkle the plants for a few days.

Another plan is to prepare the ground as above, using chip manure, mixed with leached ashes and fine manure. After the plants are up, use a cultivator or double shovel. As the vines grow, draw surface earth to the plants—never draw the earth from the vine, but replace with fresh dirt. Keep the ground clean with a hoe after the vines begin to run.

One more plan: Plow the ground deep, harrow it and have the surface soil in fine condition. The distance to plant should be regulated by the variety, some requiring more space than others. Let your hills be, say, rather flat, not more than two inches. After the plants come up, give clean culture, keeping the ground loose and level.—N. Y. Herald.

Expense of Farm Teams.

In no part of the country is this expense of keeping animals to do farm work as great as in the West. This is largely owing to the fact that Western farmers have come to use two, three and another, to make animals do the work that men perform elsewhere. Grain is sown, harvested and threshed by horse power. Grass is planted, cultivated and, in some instances, cut, dried, husked and shelled by machines operated by horse power. Even potatoes are now cut, drop ped, covered, cultivated and harvested by horse power. Of late, Western farmers have stopped raising most of the crops requiring hand cultivation. The chief objection to raising flax, broom-corn, tobacco and castor-beans is that they require too much manual labor.

The second reason why it costs more to keep a farm team here than in most parts of the country is, that farmers keep more expensive animals. An expensive team always calls for expensive feeds, expensive buildings for shelter. In the East, oxen are chiefly used for farm work. They require to be shod but once a year. A wooden yoke, which will last a century and only cost a dollar or two, takes the place of an expensive harness. The food of the oxen is grass in summer and hay and straw in winter. At the end of a dozen years they are converted into beef. They are never of much expense to their owner. Even at about half as much, they will work for a greater number of years, and will get along with poor quarters and a very simple harness.

Most Western farmers will tolerate neither oxen nor mules on their places. They must have horses; generally they insist on having three or four spans, and follow two teams to a plow and make a fine appearance on the road. Horses eat this extra amount of hay and grain the entire year. They must receive extra care and attention, and have good stables and mangers. It is likely that it will be long before the fashion of keeping horses to do the farm work changes in the West, though, without doubt, pairs and teams of oxen could be used to advantage. Most Southern farmers would say at once that they could make nothing from a farm unless they were obliged to work them with horses.—Iowa Farmer.

—Baked Indian Pudding.—Two quarts of milk, scalded, one cup meal, one-half cup of flour; mix and add the wet with a very little cold milk, then turn into the scalded milk; when cool add two eggs, one and one-half cups of sugar, one-half cup of molasses, one nutmeg, a little salt and one and one-half teaspoonfuls of ginger; put a piece of butter as large as half an egg around the pan before putting in the ingredients, and bake an hour.—Household.

Melons.

We have received one or two communications asking information about watermelons. To all such we would say: Plow deep, harrow well and mark out in rows, the distance apart depending upon the variety, from eight to ten feet. Broke up the ground deep; harrowed, check from ten to twelve feet apart. Have little or no hill; leave the hill-crown. Six or eight inches from the hill put stable manure two and a half inches thick. Cultivate and plant good seed. We have no squashes, pumpkins or gourds near. Clip the ends of the vines if you wish large melons.

Another plan: Plow and harrow and mark out eight feet each way. Then dig a hole on each square about eight or ten inches deep and two feet across. Now fill up with rotten manure, pack it slightly with your foot and spread about one inch of good soil over the top; then drop your seeds and cover them one inch. Hog manure is a good fertilizer for melons. Work them well; thin out to three in a hill. This plan will raise fine melons.

Another: Plow your ground deeply and lay it off ten feet apart each way, digging holes two by two feet apart and one foot deep. Take good barn-yard manure and fill up to within three inches of the top, covering this manure with soil, so that the hill will be a little above the general level. Plant from eight to ten seeds in a hill. When up, thin to two plants and cultivate light. If bugs trouble the vines, dissolve gum camphor in water and sprinkle the plants for a few days.

Another plan is to prepare the ground as above, using chip manure, mixed with leached ashes and fine manure. After the plants are up, use a cultivator or double shovel. As the vines grow, draw surface earth to the plants—never draw the earth from the vine, but replace with fresh dirt. Keep the ground clean with a hoe after the vines begin to run.

One more plan: Plow the ground deep, harrow it and have the surface soil in fine condition. The distance to plant should be regulated by the variety, some requiring more space than others. Let your hills be, say, rather flat, not more than two inches. After the plants come up, give clean culture, keeping the ground loose and level.—N. Y. Herald.

DR. H. R. STEVENS:
Dear Sir—I cheerfully state that your Vegetine deserves to rank as a valuable blood purifier, tonic and invigorator of life. While speaking of its merits, I will say that my wife has been greatly benefited by the use of several bottles of Vegetine. The results were unexpected by me, as she had been considerably failed in health for a long time. Respectfully, T. F. THICK.

ATTENTION is the part the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of Nature to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks, or prostrating fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite homemade remedy, SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

The President has ordered the discontinuance of the Traverse City Land Office, and the business transferred to Reed City. The Ionia Land office was sonie time ago transferred to Reed City, and this last move is virtually to consolidate the two offices.

The sabre is about to be ruled out of the cavalry regulation as a useless weapon for the soldier. It is found that soldiers do but little setting and poor much wounding with the sabre, and they are unhandy things to dangle at the side unless they are of use. The medical statistics of Germany show that in the recent war with France, out of 65,000 wounded, little over 200 only were injured by the bayonet, out of 2-295 killed, 125 only had ure signs of sabre wounds. General Sherman and Sheridan are said to regard both the sabre and bayonet as but little better than a useless encumbrance.

"Look a here" he remarked to a waiter, "Your coffee is O. K., your hash is correct, but your eggs are a little too ripe and I know your biscuits were not made with Smith's Saleratus, for that always makes the biscuits light and spongy.

STATE OF MICHIGAN Thirteenth Judicial Circuit. In Chancery.

Suit pending in the Circuit Court for the county of Charlevoix in Chancery at the village of Charlevoix in said county, on the sixth day of May, A. D. 1878.

Present, Hon. Reuben Hatch, Jr., Circuit Judge.

Richmond National Bank, Complainant.

Henry C. Morden and Agnes A. Morden, Defendants.

In this cause, it appearing from affidavit on file, that the defendants, Henry C. Morden and Agnes A. Morden, are not residents of this State, but are residents of Denver, in the county of Arapahoe and state of Indiana. On motion of Solomon & Fletcher, complainant's solicitors, it is ordered that the appearance of said non-resident defendants, and each of them be entered herein within three months from the date of this order, and in case of their appearance they are to enter into a recognizance with sufficient sureties in the penal sum of $500 conditioned to pay the costs that may be awarded against them upon the final hearing of this cause, and in case of their appearance they are to cause their plea, answer or demurrer to the complainant's bill of complaint to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on the complainant's solicitors within twenty days after service on them or a copy of said bill and notice of this order; and in default thereof, the said bill may be taken as confessed by said non-resident defendants; and it is further ordered that within twenty days after the completion of service of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county, and that said publication be continued therein once in each week for six weeks in succession or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non-resident defendants at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for their appearance.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate Office in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday, the 24th day of January, A. D. 1878.

Present J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Orwin Hudson, praying that a certain instrument now on file in this County, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that Addie B. Hayes may be appointed executor thereof. Thereupon it is ordered, that on Saturday, the 23d day of February next at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that all persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate Office in the village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be printed in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

THE Little Traverse Republican names Hon. E. G. D. Holden for Governor.

Little Traverse is soon to have another newspaper, to be called the Emmet County Independent. U. S. Hampton is to be the publisher.

R. H. Morrison, arrested for embezzling the funds of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, is to be tried in the Circuit Court for Ingham county.

THERE will be a public meeting at the Ross school house, in the township of Hayes, on Saturday, May 25, 1878, at 2 p. m., for the purpose of organizing a Farmer's Club.

BISHOP MCCOSKREY has withdrawn his resignation and asks that a full investigation be made into the charges against him.

SCHOOL MEETING.—A special school meeting, to elect a Moderator, and to talk up school matters generally, has been called for next Saturday evening. It is hoped that all interested in the school will be present.

PEARNIE was tried for murder at Elk Rapids last week, and acquitted.—One excuse the jury gave was that they wished to save expense. The verdict has caused considerable feeling in Antrim county.

The Committee of Presbyterians have contracted for the erection of a hotel on their grounds at Petoskey. The work on the Bay View House, on the Methodist grounds, is progressing finely.

Homestead settlers who have heard the frequent claims that the Democratic party is the friend of the poor man, will appreciate one phase of Congressional economy. Through the action of the Democrats in the House the force in the Land Office has been cut down until the correspondence is nine months behind, and the patenting of public lands three years behind.

Personal.—E. A. H. Cole, of South Arm, was a passenger on the Fountain City, Thursday, from Chicago.

—Richard Knight and wife took the propeller Empire State, at this place, on Friday, for Wisconsin, where they will remain some time visiting friends.

WANTED.—Highest market price will be paid for one hundred bushels of buckwheat at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

The prop Fountain City arrived from Buffalo yesterday with a few passengers and about 400 tons of general merchandise. Capt. Gibson reports foggy and squally weather most all the way up. Among the passengers are Willard A. Smith, Esq., editor and publisher of the Charlevoix (Mich.) Sentinel a sprightly five-column quarto, now in its tenth year. His wife accompanies him. The Fountain City will leave for Buffalo again to-morrow evening.—Chicago Tribune 14th.

—The propeller Oneida wooded here Sunday.

—Cleared: schooners Little Georgie, Espindola, Les Higby, scows Prince and Owen. Now in port, schooner Radical.

—The steamer Gazelle is expected here hourly.

THE BRIDGE.—The pier and turntable to the new iron bridge for this place arrived yesterday by steamer Van Raalte. Four men accompany it, and work will immediately be commenced in putting it in place. The balance of the iron will arrive next Monday.

Don't by any means think that the Republican party is dead. It is, in fact, well, and a little more than convalescent, and will fight a strong battle next fall, and a stronger one in 1880. Let the Republicans of Charlevoix county do their full share in restoring the party to its old strength and prestige.

THE correspondent of the Detroit Post and Tribune writes to that paper that "the River and Harbor bill lingers in the Senate, but Senator Ferry is confident it will pass that body substantially as it came from the House.

H. E. GEMBERLING, late of the Progress, accompanied by his family, left here Thursday by propeller Fountain City, for Detroit. From thence they go to Albion, where Mr. Gemberling assumes control of the Albion Recorder

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The third quarterly meeting of Charlevoix charge will be held next Sabbath May 26 at M. E. Church in this place—Love feast commenced Sabbath morning 9:30 o'clock, and public service commencing 10:30 o'clock a. m. quarterly conference will be held at the Church 6 o'clock on Saturday evening the 25th. The whole official board are requested to be present.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS for the week ending May 17th, 1878:

U. S. to James H. White, 160 acres in Springvale.

U. S. to Dayton S. Peck, 160 acres in Springvale.

U. S. to Frank C. Dillenback, 160 acres in Hudson.

Alonzo J Stroud and wife to Martin Friend, 160 acres in Evangeline—$750.

U. S. to Franklin B. Shaw, 80 acres in South Arm.

U. S. to Isaac Parker, 40 acres in Melrose.

It is a good time to buy your wife, daughter, sister, mother or some body else a shawl. Carpenter & Bartholomew have a nice assortment.

THE FROST.—Again we are unpleasantly reminded of the superiority of our climate over that of even more southern latitudes. On the nights of the 11th, 12th and 13th heavy frost visited the southern and western portion of this State, killing down wheat, grapes, apples, peaches, strawberries, potatoes and garden stuff. Throughout the entire southern portion of the State, as far north as Grand Rapids, the farmers' prospects have been fearfully blighted. In Grand Traverse we have of no serious damage having been done, and in this vicinity no traces of frost are noticeable, as far as we have learned.

Kid gloves only 50cts, fine stock of neck ruching, ladies' silk ties in new styles, toilet soaps, silver money purses, and any quantity of new novelties in fancy goods and notions, just received at our store. Fox, Rose & Buttars.

AN ENJOYABLE TRIP.—Ourself, wife and son took the propeller Fountain City, at this port, on Friday, the 10th. We arrived in the great city on Sunday noon, and remained until the following Tuesday evening. During that time we penetrated the dense wilderness of Chicago, went among its palaces and among its hovels, were elbowed by the millionaire and by the beggar. We saw the aristocrat alight from his carriage and ascend the marble steps of his $500,000 residence, and a brief walk brought us where squalor, poverty, filth and wretchedness unite in presenting the other extreme. From a quiet village like Charlevoix to the busy streets of the third city in the Union is a transition which almost takes one's breath, but for two days we wandered among the towering blocks, dodging street-cars and omnibusses, and interrogating policemen, gazing upon the architectural wonders of the great city — the Palmer House, the Grand Pacific, the new Postoffice, the Chamber of Commerces, and scores of other magnificent structures. From the roof of an elevator we obtained a birdseye view of Chicago, and far out upon the prairies beyond. The Water Works, Lincoln Park, McVicker's Theater, and many other places of interest were visited, and we returned at last to our steamer glutted with sight-seeing, and longing for the quiet of our own little village. Our trip was rendered doubly enjoyable because we took passage in the Fountain City. Capt. Gibson, with the able assistance of his Steward, Mr. Dickson, make the steamer a perfect home for her passengers. We never heard of a person who failed to enjoy himself on this steamer if nothing more than sea-sickness intervened to prevent.

Hon. Jay A. Hubbell, of the 9th District receives the following well merited compliment from the Detroit Post & Tribune, "Mr. Hubbell's constituents have shown a disposition to trust their interests in his hands while faithfully serving them, and they have found their advantage in it. He has also proved honest, faithful and competent, and they show their appreciation of his services in their behalf and their confidence in his continued fidelity by retaining him as their agent, rather than to try the doubtful experiment of employing an unskilled workman in his place."

Carpenter & Bartholomew have a good assortment of every thing at a way down price.

Hon. J. A. Hubbell is being endorsed for a renomination by many papers in the southern part of the district. If they represent the power that sends delegates to the congressional conventions and he is backed by a solid Lake Superior support as before, his renomination is assured.—Cadillac News.

ANOTHER POUND NET.—A small boat from Milwaukee came lately with another pound net, which the owners propose to set just south of the point north of this place. We call the attention of the Township authorities to Section 8 of the Compiled Laws of 1871, page 674, which provides that a license of $50 shall be paid by any non resident who sets a pound net on any coast of the Township.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

THE bill to repeal the Bankrupt law was laid before the Senate, on the 30th ult., with the amendments agreed to by the House, and considerable opposition was developed to the immediate repeal of the law, and a motion to refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee was finally rejected—23 to 28. The Conference report on the Naval Appropriation bill was unanimously concurred in. Several bills were reported from committees and placed on the calendar. In the House, the Legislative Appropriation bill was further considered in Committee of the Whole, and an amendment was rejected—71 to 86—reorganizing the mail at New Orleans, and appropriating $100,000 for its maintenance.

In the Senate, on the 1st, discussion was had on the resolution submitted by Mr. Blaine declaring that any radical change in the tariff at this time would be inopportune. The bill to repeal the Bankrupt law was then taken up and the House amendment providing that the repeal of the act should not affect penal actions or criminal proceedings arising under it prior to repeal, was amended so as to provide that the repeal should not affect the rights and proceedings growing out of, or pending upon, the Bankrupt law, including all rights of debtors and creditors and all rights of and suits by and against assignees under any or all of said acts in any case heretofore or now pending and providing further that the repeal should take effect Jan. 1, 1879. A motion was then agreed to, and the bill as amended by the Judiciary Committee to have the act of three years' duration, was rejected by the extreme vote of 10 ayes. A motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill fixing the rate of interest and allowing not to exceed sixteen cents per pound on sugars testing 13 dollars per hundred, etc., was lost—ayes, 13; nays, 33—not two-thirds in the affirmative.

DOMESTIC.

THE Secretary of the United States Treasury, on the 30th ult., issued a call for $5,000,000 of five-twenty bonds of 1865, interest to cease on the 30th of July next.

ALL Assistant Treasurers throughout the United States have been authorized to exchange silver dollars for greenbacks.

THE steamer Cimbria, having on board 1,000 Russian naval officers, put into Sandy-hook Harbor, Me., a few days ago, and up to the morning of the 1st remained with steam up apparently awaiting instructions from the Russian Government. Her mission to the American coast had not transpired.

THE public-debt statement, as published on the 1st, indicates the following: Total debt, including interest of $38,747,258, $2,233,223,026. Cash in Treasury, $19,585,345,376. Debt less cash in Treasury, $2,013,767,650. Decrease during April, $3,015,861. Decrease since June 30, 1877, $83,493,574.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 1st announces that silver-coin certificates of the denomination of ten and twenty dollars had been prepared. Certificates for larger amounts would be printed by the middle of the month.

On the morning of the 1st, while opposite Memphis, Tenn., the tow-boat Warner, with six barges in tow, exploded her boilers. Three persons were instantly killed and about a dozen more or less seriously injured.

ADVICES were received at Gen. Sheridan's headquarters in Chicago, on the 1st, to the effect that Sitting Bull had sent a message to Gen. Miles, commanding the District of the Yellowstone, making overtures for peace. It was also reported that the Nez Perces, at present with Sitting Bull, were preparing to cross the border with a view to surrender.

THE officers of the Gilbert Elevated Railroad, in New York City, made an official trial trip, on the 2d, running a train of three cars, carrying 100 passengers, from Trinity Church to Central Park, a distance of five miles, and including all curves, in eleven minutes.

THE number of lives lost by the Minneapolis disaster was believed, on the 3d, to be sixteen. The remains of seven bodies had been recovered, and only three of them were identified. The great Washburn Mill was literally blown to pieces, and five other mills were also a mass of ruins. A large amount of lumber, a planing mill, an elevator and 30,000 bushels of wheat, twenty-seven railroad cars, and several small machine shops and other buildings were also destroyed. The money loss is placed at $1,000,000, with about $500,000 insurance.

THE large woolen mills at South Chicago were destroyed by fire on the night of the 4th. Loss, about $150,000, and 150 persons were thrown out of employment.

THE Secretary of the Treasury, on the 5th, issued a call for $9,000,000 coupon and $9,000,000 registered 5-20 bonds, on account of subscription to the 4-per-cent. loan.

THE National House Committee on Education and Labor agreed, on the 6th, upon a bill making it a misdemeanor for the Master of a vessel to take more than fifteen Chinese passengers, male or female, to the United States after Jan. 1, 1879.

A QUANTITY of well-executed counterfeit trade dollars have lately been captured in Cincinnati. They are composed of block tin, stamped and pulverized glass. They are said to be of nearly the standard weight, and have the color and ring of the real dollar. The only means of detecting them from the genuine is by weighing them, or lifting them with the teeth, when the glass, of which they are composed, gives forth a crackling sound.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

JOHN MORRISSEY, ex-Member of Congress, and member of the New York State Senate, died at Saratoga Springs on the evening of the 1st, aged forty-seven years.

THE United States Senate, in Executive session on the 3d, confirmed the nomination of Gen. L. Smith as Collector of Customs at New Orleans.

IT was stated, on the 2d, by one of the late John Morrissey's most intimate friends and advisers, that the entire property of the deceased would realize but little over $30,000, if that much, and that the estate could not be able to settle up the debts against it.

THE next Illinois Republican State Convention is to be held at Springfield, on the 20th of June.

W. S. O'BRIEN, one of the Bonanza firm of Flood & O'Brien, of San Francisco, died at San Rafael, Cal., on the afternoon of the 3d, after a lingering illness of several months. His estate is estimated at from $15,000,000 to $30,000,000.

THE funeral of John Morrissey took place at Troy, N. Y., on the 4th, and was attended by an immense concourse of people. The entire State Senate and several Assemblymen were present.

GEN. JOHN M. BINGHAM, formerly Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, committed suicide near Milwaukee, by drowning himself in the lake, on the night of the 4th. He had previously made three attempts to poison himself. Poverty, trouble and want of adequate employment, added to a despondent disposition, were the probable causes.

THE President, on the 6th, nominated ex-Gov. Packard, of Louisiana, to be Consul at Liverpool, Eng., and ex-Gov. Lucius Fairchild, of Wisconsin, to be Consul-General at Paris, France.

FOREIGN.

ACCORDING to a Constantinople telegram of the 1st, the efforts of Gen. Todleben to secure the simultaneous withdrawal of the Russians from Adrianople and the Turks from Rodosto have failed.

THE Paris Exposition was formally opened by the President, Marshal MacMahon, on the 1st, in the presence of a vast multitude. The Exposition was by no means complete, but it was thought a few days' labor would bring order out of the existing chaos. The American department is said to be especially good, and to attract great attention.

A ST. PETERSBURG telegram of the 2d says the principle of a direct exchange of views between London and the former city, on questions interesting England, had been agreed upon. It was stated at Vienna, on the same day, that the negotiations would be based upon larger concessions than had been previously accorded to by Russia.

MINISTER SEWARD has recently telegraphed to the Department of State, in Washington, that the famine in the Northern Provinces of China will continue six months longer. Funds for the relief of sufferers, if transmitted by telegraph, can be disbursed by the Relief Committee, of by the Commission appointed at Pekin. A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, writing from Tokio, under date of April 5, sends the following: "The famine in the North of China rages with increasing severity, and the most dreadful reports come from the afflicted regions. In one town a man opened a shop for the sale of human flesh, and did a good business in cannibalistic joints and roasts till the local Mandarin caused the shopkeeper to be arrested and beheaded."

ACCORDING to a Berlin dispatch of the 3d, the Czar had himself conducted the correspondence in regard to the Eastern question during the illness of Prince Gortschakoff.

THE Austrian Government has issued orders for the concentration of an army of 25,000 men on the Bosnian frontier.

A BERLIN dispatch of the 5th says Prince Bismark had announced that Germany would observe strict neutrality in case of war between Russia and Great Britain.

AN Alexandria (Egypt) dispatch of the 6th says preparations were making to disembark Indian soldiers at Port Said and Suez.

THE Grand Duke Nicholas received at St. Petersburg, on the 5th, the ex-Sultan Abdul Aziz. He was enthusiastically received.

ON the 6th, the British Parliament was in session for the first time since the Easter recess. In reply to the questions of Isaac Ing Liberals, Sir Stafford Northcote, Chancellor of the Exchequer, said the negotiations with Russia continued, but declined to discuss them on the ground that the public interests would be jeopardized thereby.

A SPECIAL from Lyra, in Turkish Armenia, published on the 6th, says that ninety-one Armenian villages had been plundered by the Bedan Kurds, and that the Ottoman authorities were unable to afford protection.

The International Exhibition at Paris.

PARIS, May 1.

THE ceremony of the opening of the International Exhibition took place today with great pomp and success. The ceremony began at 2:30 in the afternoon, at which time it was showery, but at three o'clock the sun was shining brightly again. The crowd was immense and enthusiastic, in spite of alternations of rain throughout the proceedings. Cries were everywhere heard of "Vive la Republique," "Vive la France."

Marshal MacMahon arrived in the State carriage escorted by his military household, the troops being drawn up all along the route from the Elysee. A procession was then formed, which marched from the Grand Arcade to a platform overlooking the fountain and commanding a view of nearly all the buildings and grounds. Here Triesdorf de Bort, Minister of Commerce, welcomed the Marshal in a short speech. The Marshal then declared the Exhibition opened.

One hundred and one guns from the Invalides, Mont Valerien, and an island in the Seine followed the announcement. At the same time two military bands struck up, all the fountains played, and the soldiers stationed by the flagstaffs hoisted the flags of all Nations on the roofs of the two palaces and annexes. The Marshal then reascended the Trocadero Palace, the procession reforming behind him, and, after completing the round of the building, crossed over the river to the Champ de Mars. The troops were drawn upon and near the bridge. The terrace of the Champ de Mars Palace was occupied by Senators, Deputies, Council of State, Magistrates, Academicians, military staff and French Commissioners. Entering by the central door, the procession went through the grand vestibule, decorated with crown jewels, Sevres porcelain, Gobelin tapestry, and the Prince of Monaco Indian collection. It then passed through all the sections, the Commissioners of each country greeting the Chief at the door, and next inspected the military school, where all the exhibition workmen were stationed, and lastly traversed the machinery annexe.

The speakers at the official declaration of the opening was imposing in the extreme. From the heights of the Trocadero the thousands of guests assembled could see crowds in the surrounding streets, the banks of the Seine, and at Passy, both on the right and left in front, in the immense area crowded with the exposition buildings gaily decorated with the flags of different Nations, the grand cascade and rows of statues illustrating the countries participating. Long lines of cuirassiers filled the road to the Champs Elysees and Tuilleries, interspersed with detachments of mounted guards of Paris, magnificent escorts of visiting Princes and the military household of President MacMahon.

The dazzling facade of the palace on the Champ de Mars was richly ornamented with National emblems, and in every imaginable space the thousands of spectators were held in place by lines of infantry.

The workmen had made extraordinary efforts during the past three days in the preparation of the various sections. The English, American and Belgian had been especially pushed, and present a creditable appearance. The American, though unfinished, compares favorably with the English, while occupying only one-sixth of the space allotted the British exhibit. The display of machine tools is inferior to the American exhibit at Philadelphia, but superior to any other at this Exhibition. Agricultural, sewing and weighing machines make a fine display. The textiles are not yet arranged, but promise very well. The drugs, chemicals, publishers' exhibits, chromos and cutlery are superior to the competing exhibits in other sections. The American Art Department is nearly ready. It will be the best ever shown abroad by America. The hall is too small, but it is beautifully arranged, and contains 100 paintings and a few water-colors. American artists residing abroad represented here include Bacon, Bridgman, Dana, Dubois, Ward, Hunt, Maynard, Lippincott and Mayall. Places of honor are occupied by Bridgman and Dana. Rome is represented by Benson and Vedder, and Dusseldorf by Shode. Munich is not represented.

THE Elmira Gazette has noticed that when a woman is mad she always slams the door. It is much handier than to kick the legs of the piano.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

AT 5:40 o'clock, on the morning of the 29th ult., an explosion of the gas main leading into the Detroit Free Press building took place. The gas ignited, and instantaneously the whole edifice burst into flames. There were at that hour in the building the chief pressman, two mailing clerks, the night engineer and fire pressman, all of whom escaped after the fire broke out, two of them being slightly injured. The bursting gas ascending through the stairway ignited at once every floor of the two buildings. An effort was made by the pressmen to put on the safety hose and throw a stream of water on the fire below, but the attempt was abandoned as futile. The presses were stopped, and the forms of the paper saved. The city firemen were promptly on hand, but, despite their efforts, the building was completely gutted by fire. The loss was somewhere near $40,000.

ON the night of the 29th ult., Mrs. Jacob Bost, of Detroit, while temporarily insane, during the absence of her husband, administered laudanum to herself and a six-year-old daughter. Physicians were summoned immediately upon the discovery of their situation, and, despite the most strenuous efforts the daughter died. The mother's life was saved.

A STATEMENT of Accounts in the chancery case of Dougherty and Ann Maria Culver-sity, this being a cross suit began by Douglas, has been prepared. Judge Ramsdell, counsel for the Dougherty estate, refuses to state anything relative to the statement, but it is asserted by reliable persons that the statement shows $10,000 of Dougherty money to be in Douglas' hands, in coarse lumpless statement will contradict this, and show that the University gains but $30,000.

THE Sheriffs of Michigan met at Lansing, on the 3d, and perfected an organization for mutual assistance and co-operation. Jas. R. Hall, of Ingham County, was made President, and B. A. Hunnell, of Berrien County, Secretary. The membership of the Association is forty. The next meeting will be held at Jackson, on the 20th of November.

THE State Firemen's Association met at Jackson, on the 2d, and elected the following officers: President, C. H. Pond, of Quincy; Vice-Presidents, T. E. Lusk, of Jackson; E. Clark, of Big Rapids, and W. N. Kirkwood, of Paw Paw; Recording Secretary, A. D. Pond, of Allegan; Corresponding and Financial Secretary, J. V. Johnson, of Charlotte; Treasurer, Chauncey Cornwall, of Ypsilanti; Statistician, F. H. Sprague, of Jackson. Delegate to the National Convention, to be held at Cleveland, Thomas O'Neil, of Kalamazoo. The next meeting will be held in Detroit, in May, 1879.

A Republican State Convention, to nominate State officers, will be held at the Detroit Opera House, in the City of Detroit, on Wednesday, May 14, 1878, at eleven o'clock a. m.

The several counties (which, Grand Rapids, May 15, 1876, every county will be entitled to one delegate at large and one for each 600 of the total vote cast for Governor in 1876 and one additional delegate for each fraction over 300; but every county will be entitled to at least one delegate. A resolution adopted in 1866 provides that no delegate will be entitled to a seat who is not a resident of the county he represents.

JAMES MCMILLAN, GEO. SCRIPPS.

—A naturalist visited the Kanin Peninsula in Northern Russia, last summer, to make natural history collections, and also to study the peculiarities of the Samoyede inhabitants of that region. These primitive people took alarm at his proceedings, especially when he attempted to measure their heads, and, believing that he had some sinister design toward them, they marched with their reindeer far into the interior of the peninsula, leaving the enterprising man of science with them. He was finally rescued by some fishermen, but he lost all the insects he had collected, as the Samoyedes drank up the alcohol in which they were preserved.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

ALL babies are diminutive Cæsars, since they come, they see, they conquer, sometimes by their gentle silliness, but oftener by continued boisterous crying, induced by Colic, Teething, Flatulence, etc. Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup, by its gentle yet specific influence, quiets the little ones without ever producing the least injurious effect. Price 25 cts. a bottle.

The Minneapolis Explosion.—Great Loss of Life and Property.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 2.

At seven o'clock this evening the city was shaken, as by an earthquake, by a terrific explosion, which was promptly traced to the groups of great flouring-mills, in what is known as the plateform, just above St. Anthony's Falls, where the entire flouring district of the city is concentrated.

The explosion came from the great Washburn Mill, from which a column of flame was seen to shoot up several hundred feet, followed by a crash, which crushed the immense structure like an egg-shell. Other explosions instantly destroyed the Thompson, Hoyt and Humboldt Mills, and flames immediately burst out, communicating to the galaxy of mills, and other structures down the bank of the river nearly to the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad shops. The destruction from the shock of the explosion extended much farther, glass being wrecked for several squares, and buildings shaken throughout the city. The immediate theory of the explosion is that it took place in gas generated in the patent middlings purifier process.

There were many thrilling incidents and narrow escapes. Daniel Day was blown the whole length of Pettit & Robinson's Mill, out through a window, and escaped. One poor fellow, who could not be recognized had escaped injury from the explosion, and was observed crawling through the darting, hungry flames toward the track of the Minneapolis & St. Louis road, directly in the rear of the Washburn Mill. He managed to reach the rail, and there evidently became exhausted and fell back into the raging hell behind, where his agonies instantly ended. It now appears that most of the day force had gone home, and only the smaller night force remained.

The loss to property is enormous, but the confusion is too great for an intelligible estimate at present. A rough calculation places it at $2,000,000, of which $1,000,000 will fall upon the milling interest. The loss throughout the city by the breaking of glass, etc., is $10,000. Five mills and a planing mill were destroyed, beside adjoining property, including eight-seven out of the 197 tuns of stone in the city.

The five flouring mills, which were included in the disaster, formed a group which comprises the heaviest concerns in the State. Chief among them were the two Washburn Mills, the property of Gov. C. C. Washburn, of Wisconsin, of which the one at Minneapolis was the explosion occurred was the largest flouring mill in the country, and the largest but one in the world. It was built in 1870, included forty-one run of stone, and was worth $200,000. It is now a heap of ruins, but all with its companion on the platform.

The destruction is complete, so far as the limits above named, and persons within much wider bounds. The flames are still raging in the ruins, but are under control, and no farther extension is feared.

It is now hoped the dead will be confined to fourteen mentioned as in the Washburn Mill.

A WHARF RAT.

He was a levee "Rat," and his name was Dick. As a child he managed somehow to escape the meanness of want, neglect and disease in great cities; and we find him a small boy twelve years old, living where he may, eating what he can get; his hand against everything (that will sell at a junk store), and every one's against him. A human rat—a thing to hide itself in dark places, and be chased and worried when it ventures into the light.

The levee which Dick infests is that of New Orleans; down by the foot of Jackson street, where the English steamers lie, is his happy hunting ground, and the day when we make his acquaintance, it is not very productive. The hunting has all been on one side, and how Dick is discovered hiding between two bales of cotton is the query. He is kicked, pushed, dragged, jostled backward and forward by the stevedore's gang, like a ragged shuttlecock, every one has a curse and a blow for the "Rat," with whom things are going hard, when—

"Why, you young rascal! are you going without saying thank you?"

"Thank ye."

"No, not me. Thank the lady."

"Thank ke kindly, ma'am," says Dick.

It was the first polite speech he had ever uttered, and Heaven knows where he picked it up.

The party remained on board till about six o'clock, and by the time it broke up every one had forgotten the "Rat," but as Mrs. Austen was crossing the levee he ran up, much to the annoyance of her companion, who had lost the use of his cane.

"I say," says the Rat, "do you like him?" with a chuck of the thumb toward the steamer.

"Capt. Gilbert?"

"Yes—is he your feller?"

"Get out, you scamp," cries the gentleman, indignantly.

"Let him speak, Fred," the lady pleads. "No, Dick, I am married, and this is my husband; but Capt. Gilbert is only a kind friend. I crossed with him once, and he was very good to me when I was sick."

"Way on your own sick?" asks Dick, with a face full of wonder.

"Often. So I can answer your question, and say that I dolike the Captain very much."

"You'd hate for anything bad to happen to him?"

"Why, of course—to him or anyone else."

"Wot, to me?"

"Indeed I would, my poor boy. O Fred, how wistful he looks! Mayn't I give him some of Charley's left-off things? I have a little boy at home," she goes on, seeing astonishment in her husband's eye, "about your size."

"Does he get chickens to eat?" asks the Rat.

"Yes."

"Every day?"

"No, not every day," she answers, smiling; it is what she does qualify her reply, for Dick's credulity was not yet sufficiently elastic to bear such a marvel as a boy about his size, who had chickens every day.

So they bade him follow them, and more wonders were in store for him. He sees Charlie, he was taken up to the cabin to see the pets on board, the promised things were produced and tried on over his rags. Here he stood last in admiration. He gazed about him bewildered, and some dim sense of shame stole over him as he saw his own reflection in the looking-glass.

"Mayn't put 'em on now?" he asks, as the things are selected.

"Better not," says the lady. "Put them on in the morning. Come here again about ten o'clock, and we will see what we can do with you."

He submits, and goes down very reluctantly, with two whole suits of Charley's left-off clothes bundled up in a large handkerchief, and fifty cents in his pocket. As soon as the half-hour closes after him the brute instincts of secrecy and evasion pull his jelly-bag hat over his eyes and send him off at a run.

Capt. Gilbert spends the evening with his agent, and then returns to the ship about eleven o'clock.

"Without leave?"

"Whose watch is it?"

"Mr. Andrews."

"Send him here."

"How's this, Mr. Andrews," asks the Captain, angrily.

"It's not my fault, sir. They don't go over the gangway. They crawl over the side and onto the beams of the wharf. It's impossible to stop them."

The Captain knows New Orleans, and, being a just man, had no more to say. It is very provoking. He is going to sail to-morrow, and those men will come on board either drunk or stupid from the effect of drink. Some of them, perhaps, will not come at all. The weather for the last few days has been oppressively hot, and now there is hope of rain. The sky is dark and low, and the last evening breeze has gone down. The Captain has gone down to his cabin, and tries to read, but the mosquitoes won't let him, so he gets into bed, tucks in his bar, and sleeps the sleep of a tired man.

Something wakes him conscious that two bells (one o'clock) is striking. Then he hears a whisper, "Capt'n! Cap'n!" close by his side. In an instant he had his revolver ready, and in the act of striking a match, when the whisper says, "Hush! it's me—Dick. Don't say a word; don't light a match. Hush! Is there a man named Phil Wood in your crowd?"

"Yes, a fireman; but he deserted last week," the Captain whispers back.

"Have you got any spoons aboard?"

"Spoons? Oh, specie, you mean."

"Wot's that?"

"Money."

"I thought so. Well, Cap'n, Phil Wood and five more are after that there specious, and they are aboard now."

"Good heavens! why didn't you tell me before?" gasps the Captain.

"I'll clean shevied me, 'cos I'd got a bundle that the lady gave me. He took it away, he did, and locked me up," exclaimed Dick, "but I got out."

"On board now, do you say?" asks the Captain.

"Yes, and at work, too. Listen?"

"Fire that," he says, thrusting a pistol into Dick's hand, "and run forward shouting for help as loud as you can scream." Then he darts out on deck.

And no time to spare! The thieves have overpowered and gagged the man on watch, have cut round the fastenings on the hatch leading to the specie-room, and the boxes of gold are out and ready for spiriting away. It is a brisk affair while it lasts; which is unfortunately for the captor, steward and some others aroused by Dick's shouts and the firing come upon the scene. Then such of the thieves as can do so jump overboard for their retreat forward is cut off. Three remain: one, the leader, dead; another with his thigh splintered, and a third with several balls in his body.

The first thing they do is to release poor Mr. Andrews, whom they still find insensible from a blow on the head. By this time the police have come, and are searching the ship, lest others of the thieves might be hiding.

"Where's that boy, the Rat?" asks the Chief Officer; "bring a light here. Ah! he's another of them. Turn him over. Oh, Lawrence, Captain, look here. Here's gratitude! If it isn't that cursed Rat that the lady——"

"Mercy!" cries the Captain, "I forgot all about him! Is he hurt?"

"Shot right through the body, and serves him right," is Mansfield's reply.

It struck the speaker "silly," as he afterward said, to see the skipper fall down on his knees beside the "Rat," lift his head upon his shoulder, and in the most endearing way say, "Are you hurt bad, my boy! Don't start. I'm your friend the Captain, Dick—speak to me."

"Is the police gone?" he moans.

"They shan't hurt you, Dick—no one shall. Oh, doctor, come and attend to my poor, brave little fellow. Any drop of his blood is worth more than all the lives of those scoundrels. Do your best for him, and send for all the surgeons in the city if they can help poor Dick! Poor little faithful chap!"

The wounded thieves are carried off to the nearest hospital by the police. Dick is taken to the Captain's cabin, and placed in his bed. The ship's doctor does his very best for him. The most famous surgeon in the city comes and looks grave. Capt. Gilbert never leaves him.

Capt. Dick's voice has become very low and tremulous—"was that there money yours?"

"No; but it was in my charge."

"I took a good deal if I got it, eh?"

"I should have been ruined."

"She wouldn't ha' liked that."

"She? who do you mean my boy?"

"The lady—her as you was good to."

The Captain turned aside, and tried hard to swallow something which had never passed his lips.

"Was it for her sake," he asked, "that you did this?"

"She said she'd hate to have any thing bad to come to you," replies the Rat, "cos you was good to her when she was sick. Two nights ago I heard Phil Wood and his crowd talking about robbing a ship of specious. They said they was going to 'tice all the men ashore with drink, and there'd be only one man forward besides the Cap'n. There was to ha' bin one put at the Cap'n door to knock him on the head if he came out. I didn't know for certain it war your ship, and I was a-coming to ask if you had specious, when the p'liceman cheviced me."

"Who was it that shot you?"

"Don't know. When I see the p'lice I crawled away to where you found me. I was skeer'd, for fear they'd think I belonged to the other crowd."

The Rat is skin and bone, and nervous as a cat. He has lost more blood than he can spare from that slight wound on his arm.

When the lady comes early in the morning, the Rat is shaking slowly. His face brightens up as he sees her.

"I say—don't you cry like that," says he. Chubbie he puts up his hand to withdraw hers from her eyes. He touches it with awe. It does not break nor fly off, and nothing is done to him for his daring. Encouraged by such immunity, he ventures to give it a little pat, and then the face which he is watching intently is lit up with a smile through its tears. Into his universe—into his half-savage mind dawns the first idea of a caress. He clasps the lady's hand and draws it down and presses it there with both his little brown paws. Then he leans back with a long-drawn sigh, and shuts his eyes.

* * * * * * *

Three years have passed, and Capt. Gilbert's steamer is again at her wharf at the foot of Jackson street; and again Mr. and Mrs. Austen are to lunch on board. As the lady is stepping down from the gang-way, a well-grown, handsome boy, in a blue flannel knickerbocker suit, and straw hat with ship's ribbon, came styly forward.

"Why, that is never Dick?" she exclaims.

"Dick all over," says the Captain, proudly.

"Oh, Dick, how you have grown, and how improved!"

"There was plenty of room for that," laughs the grandam Rat.

Then the Captain takes her aside and explains. "He's been at school ever since we got well, and has learned more than other boys in double the time. Oh, he's smart! I'm educating him now for my profession, and believe he could pass for Second-to-morrow."

"What name have you given him?" asks the lady.

"My own. My wife thinks as much of him as I do; and we've no children of our own, why—"

"Capt. Gilbert, you are a good man!"

A Solid Acre of Silver.

The Rocky Mountain Tourist says: "One of the most remarkable mines in California gulch is in leads three feet in thickness, the ore from which yields from 240 to 270 ounces of silver to the ton, and is free milling. It is a great exhibition of limestone, dipping about 15 degs. Two openings have been made at points 600 feet apart, and sufficient ore is in sight to make millions of the dollars of our daddies.' The owners have gone far enough to know that there is a full acre of the ore in the one solid body, and some conception may be formed of the amazing richness of this discovery by a calculation of its dimensions. A cubic foot weighs 170 pounds, and, as the ore lies, twelve cubic feet make a ton. There are 43,560 square feet in an acre, and the body of ore, being three feet in thickness, makes 130,680 cubic feet, which, with twelve cubic feet to the ton, makes 10,890 tons, worth $250 per ton, or the enormous value in the aggregate of $2,700,000. The Crescent is another mine worked like a coal bed, the ore lying horizontally in the large room that has been opened, the roof being held up by heavy timbers with very stout caps and tugging-poles. The ore breasts from a foot to three and four feet, and occasionally very fine specimens of horn silver are found."

An Alligator in a Street Car.

A GENTLEMAN enters with a wooden box 24-feet-long and takes his seat, carefully placing the package across his knees. His right-hand neighbor rises to give place to a man with a pot of crimson paint, and clinging to a hook-strap and standing on one foot, enjoys a chat with a vivacious lady on the opposite side of the car. An abrupt application of the brake causes him to describe a half circle and to strike with considerable force one end of the strange box, displacing its light cover and tilting it to an angle of forty-five degrees. Forthwith a promising young alligator flops over on the floor. The man of paint shot upward like an arrow from Rawahan's bow, upsetting the crimson paint on the young gentleman's pantaloons. The sudden jar given to the alligator, with the gratuitous bath of a foreign element, seems to render the sleepy emigrant from the bayou frantic for a moment. At this moment the driver and horses cease to render the sleepy emigrant from the bayou frantic for a moment. At this moment the driver and horses cease the infection, one dropping his brake and the others plunging forward, while the conductor at the rear is violently jerking bell and windy trying to open the door. Under the impression that he is already bitten, the young gentleman hops on one foot and groans, and the young lady, who is standing on the seat, attacks the amphibious stranger with her sun-umbrella, until the box lid is closed upon him.—Cleveland Leader.

TRAILING ARBUTUS.

Deep in the lonely forest,
Hush on the mountain side,
Long is the dreary winter,
Short is the summertide;
Just in the earth between them,
Pregnant with sun and showers,
Starts from the earth perennial
Fairest of northern flowers.

All through the sunny summer
Lavish with wealth of bloom,
She too hath shared life's fullness
Hid in her forest gloom;
Nurtured with dews and sunlight
Richly her buds are fed,
Fresh while the summer fadeth,
Fresh when its flowers are dead.

Thus, when the rude winds seek her,
Threaten her birth to blight,
Fiercely assailed by winter,
Fear has she aught from frost;
Fast all the spring draws nearer,
Fast, till the days grow long,
Fast, till the April showers
Quicken the chilly sod.

Wake by the murmuring breezes,
Kissed by the shining sun,
Up in a land of roses,
Blushes the trailing one!
Blushing in fairy fashion,
Dressing a rosy bed,
Lovely as Arbutus
Drew her soft couch shed.

Beauty and pink and shy!
Lifting her head to the sky!
Up to the changeful sky
Weavers' rare pattern, dear darling.
Fresh in thy virgin hue,
Sweet as the wakening dew!
Dearly thy charms renew.

A WHARF RAT.

He was a levee "Rat," and his name was Dick. As a child he managed somehow to escape the meanness of want, neglect and disease in great cities; and we find him a small boy twelve years old, living where he may, eating what he can get; his hand against everything (that will sell at a junk store), and every one's against him. A human rat—a thing to hide itself in dark places, and be chased and worried when it ventures into the light.

The levee which Dick infests is that of New Orleans; down by the foot of Jackson street, where the English steamers lie, is his happy hunting ground, and the day when we make his acquaintance, it is not very productive. The hunting has all been on one side, and how Dick is discovered hiding between two bales of cotton is the query. He is kicked, pushed, dragged, jostled backward and forward by the stevedore's gang, like a ragged shuttlecock, every one has a curse and a blow for the "Rat," with whom things are going hard, when—

"Why, you young rascal! are you going without saying thank you?"

"Thank ye."

"No, not me. Thank the lady."

"Thank ke kindly, ma'am," says Dick.

It was the first polite speech he had ever uttered, and Heaven knows where he picked it up.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, May 17, 1878.

Editor Sentinel:

New York is just at present in what might be called "a state of mind." The cause of this sad condition of things is smells—smells numerous, smells penetrating, smells nauseous and outrageous. What makes it worse is the fact that it is not the lower, plebeia, business portion of the Island that is afflicted, but the great brown stone district lying south of Madison square, and typically known as Murray Hill. Just think of it! Murray Hill smells bad! Shades of Sybaris and Cyprus! Can you imagine it? Murray Hill that wears lace and diamonds, that can digest no coarser diet than rose-leaves or spiders' ankles on toast, and to whose delicate senses the perfume of the wood violet is vulgarly strong and oppressive! Why, no such low word as smell would be allowed in its vocabulary. And yet there stands the grievous fact that at this writing this sanctum sanctorum of fashion and refinement is for the most part wrapped it the loathsome embrace of a horrible stench. Is it any wonder that New York is on its hind legs at such an outlandish, such an impossible outrage?

The immediate cause of this audacious invasion of Gotham's most aristocratic olfactories is a cluster of rendering establishment and glue factories down by the East River, and the prime course is a lazy and inefficient Board of Health that licenses these nuisances. Until lately this august body of two members has totally ignored the many individual protests which have been raised against the constantly growing infliction, but now the press and the Grand Jury having taken the matter up in a spirit which leaves no doubt of their intention to bring about a reform, the haughty "Board of Disease," as it is called, is coming down from its lofty height and making various hurried promises of better conduct. If they went to save their bacon they will have to show themselves in earnest at once, for when our Murray Hill is stepped on we are a dangerous lot.

Whether the large amount of editorial attention which has been bestowed on the excursion of the Coaching Club to Philadelphia on Saturday is the result of a genuine and wondering admiration for this not very startling performance, or of such a scarcity of important news as causes the unfortunate fraternity whose endless task it is to fill so many columns a day to catch wildly at every straw of interest that floats with the sluggish current, is an open question. The simple fact is, that a private Club, in search of amusement, got up a sort of picnic to Philadelphia, and by way of novelty drove over in a coach, preferring, for some unknown reason, this slow and laborious method to the quicker and easier mode proved by the railroad Immediately the metropolitan press breaks out all over with columns of description, high sounding editorials, and elaborate maps of the route, and the Illustrated papers fill themselves with soul-stirring engravings of the coach "as it appeared" under all manner of circumstances

My own experience in coaching being mostly confined to travel in a Broadway stage, it may be that I do not fully understand the charm of the thing, as practiced by Delancy Kane and his followers; but things being as they are, I strongly incline to the idea of a Pullman car in preference to the cramped jolting of an obsolete conveyance having for its sole recommendation the temporary patronage of a blase bon ton.

How rich men's fortunes shrink and dwindle when their estates are settled. Before W. S. O'Brien, of Bonanza fame, died, rumor made of him a sort of Monte Cristo, and talked freely of twenty or twenty-five millions as his money value. His executors think his property may realize four or five millions. Then there was John Morrissey who was popularly supposed to roll in ill-gotten wealth.—Those in charge of his affairs now say they will be lucky if they can pay his debts and two small bequests which he made to his sisters in his will.

On the other hand, there is occasionally, though very rarely, an instance wherein current report fails to do justice to the amount of a man's possessions.—Mr. Charles Morgan, who died here a few years ago, was a man whose name rarely got into the papers, and who was known by name only to comparatively few, but who turns out to have been perhaps next to Vanderbilt in the extent of his ownership of railroad and steamship property. He leaves his family some $12,000,000.

It is probable that opposition to the Brooklyn Bridge, like that which fought the construction of every foot of the elevated railways, will cease only with the completion of the work. Another strong effort has been commenced to have the work stopped and the millions of money already sunk abandoned, on the old ground that it will interfere with the passage of tall masted vessels. Luckily the great enterprise is too far advanced to be more than delayed and annoyed by these never ending attacks. The greatest good of the greatest number" must positively prevail.

This being the regular season for the anniversaries of the various and educational institutions, the American Bible Society has just held its sixty-second annual meeting, at which some interesting figures were given regarding its work. During the past year it has distributed nearly 900,000 Bibles in this and foreign countries, and during its whole existence, has printed and circulated the enormous number of thirty-four million eight hundred thousand copies of the sacred volume.

RADIX.

THE report of special agent Brooks in reference to the Indian homesteads of the Ottawas and Chippewas, in Michigan, has been referred to at length in the Washington correspondence of the Post & Tribune. This report is made the basis of a recent letter from Commissioner of the Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior. The commissioner coincides with the agent in the belief that in many cases the proceedings by which the Indians were deprived of their homesteads were not regular, and presents the following bill to remedy defects in the existing law and to right any wrongs that may have been inflicted upon the Indians in the past:

Be it enacted, That all homestead entries under the act of Congress of June 10, 1872, March 3, 1875, and March 23, 1876, within the limits of the reservation made pursuant to the treaty of July 31, 1855, with the Ottawas and Chippewas of Michigan, which the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall find to have been made in good faith by the class of Ottawa and Chippewa Indians who had not made selections or purchases under said treaty, including such as were minors at the expiration of the period during which selections and purchases were allowed to be made thereunder, where no adverse claim of prior inception exists, and the tract does not exceed the legal maximum in quantity, shall be confirmed, and patents shall be issued thereon to such Indians, all restrictions, provisions, or requirements of the homestead laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. That when applications have been made by any Indians of the class hereinbefore mentioned for homestead entries under said acts, and the application refused by the district land officers, for any reason which the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall find to be legally sufficient, the Indians by whom the applications were made shall be entitled to the benefits of the foregoing section on their entries being made, in like manner as if made before the passage of this act: Provided, That where the land so applied for has subsequently been disposed of to an applicant in good faith under any of the land laws of the United States, other land may be entered by such Indian, and, upon such entry being made, the confirmation shall extend thereto in like manner as hereinbefore provided.

Provided, That where such homestead entries have been canceled for any reason whatever, and the lands embraced thereon have been subsequently entered under the homestead laws of the United States by parties innocent of fraud in procuring such cancellation, such Indians shall have the right to make entry elsewhere, and shall thereupon be entitled to patents for the lands so entered in lieu of the original tracts.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the Liver. TUESDAY, MAY 21, - - 1878

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, May 17, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

New York is just at present in what might be called "a state of mind." The cause of this sad condition of things is smells—smells numerous, smells penetrating, smells nauseous and outrageous. What makes it worse is the fact that it is not the lower, plebeian, business portion of the island that is afflicted, but the great brown stone district lying north of Madison square, and typically known as Murray Hill. Just think of it! Murray Hill smells bad! Shades of Sybaris and Cyprus! Can you imagine it? Murray Hill that wears lace and diamonds, that can digest no coarser diet than rose-leaves or spiders' ankles on toast, and to whose delicate senses the perfume of the wood violet is vulgarly strong and oppressive! Why, no such low word as smell would be allowed in its vocabulary. And yet there stands the grievous fact that at this writing this sanctum sanctorum of fashion and refinement is for the most part wrapped in the loathsome embrace of a horrible stench. Is it any wonder that New York is on its hind legs at such an unheard of, such an impossible outrage?

The immediate cause of this audacious invasion of Gotham's most aristocratic olfactories is a cluster of rendering establishment and glue factories down by the East River, and the prime course is a lazy and inefficient Board of Health that licenses these nuisances. Until lately this august body of two members has totally ignored the many individual protests which have been raised against the constantly growing infliction, but now the press and the Grand Jury having taken the matter up in a spirit which leaves no doubt of their intention to bring about a reform, the haughty "Board of Disease," as it is called, is coming down from its lofty height and making various hurried promises of better conduct. If they want to save their bacon they will have to show themselves in earnest at once, for when our Murray Hill is stepped on we are a dangerous lot.

Whether the large amount of editorial attention which has been bestowed on the excursion of the Coaching Club to Philadelphia on Saturday is the result of a genuine and wondering admiration for this not very startling performance, or of such a scarcity of important news as quite the unfortunate fraternity whose endless task it is to fill so many columns a day to catch wildly at every straw of interest that floats with the sluggish current, is an open question. The simple fact is, that a private Club, in search of amusement, got up a sort of picnic to Philadelphia, and by way of novelty drove over in a coach, preferring, for some unknown reason, this slow and laborious method to the quicker and easier mode proved by the railroad. Immediately the metropolitan press breaks out all over with columns of description, high-sounding editorials, and elaborate maps of the route, and the illustrated papers fill themselves with soul-stirring engravings of the coach "as it appeared" under all manner of circumstances.

My own experience in coaching being mostly confined to travel in a Broadway stage, it may be that I do not fully understand the charm of the thing, as practiced by Delancy Kane and his followers; but things being as they are, I strongly incline to the idea of a Pullman car in preference to the cramped jolting of an obsolete conveyance having for its sole recommendation the temporary patronage of a blase too too.

How rich men's fortunes shrink and dwindle when their estates are settled. Before W. S. O'Brien, of Bonanza fame, died, rumor made of him a sort of Monte Cristo, and talked freely of twenty or twenty-five millions as his money value. His executors think his property may realize four or five millions. Then there was John Morrissey who was popularly supposed to roll in ill-gotten wealth.—Those in charge of his affairs now say they will be lucky if they can pay his debts and two small bequests which he made to his sisters in his will.

On the other hand, there is occasionally, though very rarely, an instance wherein current report fails to do justice to the amount of a man's possessions.—Mr. Charles Morgan, who died here a few years ago, was a man whose name rarely got into the papers, and who was known by name only to comparatively few, but who turns out to have been perhaps next to Vanderbilt in the extent of his ownership of railroad and steam ship property. He leaves his family some $13,000,000.

It is probable that opposition to the Brooklyn Bridge, like that which fought the construction of every foot of the elevated railways, will cease only with the completion of the work. Another strong effort has been commenced to have the work stopped and the millions of money already sunk abandoned, on the old ground that it will interfere with the passage of tall masted vessels. Luckily the great enterprise is too far advanced to be more than delayed and annoyed by these never ceasing attacks. The greatest good of the greatest number must positively prevail.

This being the regular season for the anniversaries of the various and educational institutions, the American Bible Society has just held its sixty-second annual meeting, at which some interesting figures were given regarding its work. During the past year it has distributed nearly 900,000 Bibles in this and foreign countries, and during its whole existence, has printed and circulated the enormous number of thirty-four million eight hundred thousand copies of the sacred volume.

RADIX.

THE report of special agent Brooks in reference to the Indian homesteads of the Ottawas and Chippewas, in Michigan, has been referred to at length in the Washington correspondence of the Post & Tribune. This report is made the basis of a recent letter from Commissioner of the Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior. The commissioner coincides with the agent in the belief that in many cases the proceedings by which the Indians were deprived of their homesteads were not regular, and presents the following bill to remedy defects in the existing law and to right any wrongs that may have been inflicted upon the Indians in the past:

Be it enacted, That all homestead entries under the act of Congress of June 10, 1872, March 3, 1875, and March 23, 1876, within the limits of the reservation made pursuant to the treaty of July 31, 1855, with the Ottawas and Chippewas of Michigan, which the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall find to have been made in good faith by the class of Ottawa and Chippewa Indians who had not made selections or purchases under said treaty, including such as were minors at the expiration of the period during which selections and purchases were allowed to be made thereunder, where no adverse claim of prior inception exists, and the tract does not exceed the legal maximum in quantity, shall be confirmed, and patents shall be issued thereon to such Indians, all restrictions, provisions, or requirements of the homestead laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. That when applications have been made by any Indians of the class hereinbefore mentioned for homestead entries under said acts, and the application refused by the district land officers, for any reason which the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall find to be legally sufficient the Indians by whom the applications were made shall be entitled to the benefits of the foregoing section on their entries being made, in like manner as if made before the passage of this act: Provided, That where the land so applied for has subsequently been disposed of to an applicant in good faith under any of the land laws of the United States, other land may be entered by such Indian, and, upon such entry being made, the confirmation shall extend thereto in like manner as hereinbefore provided.

Provided, That where such homestead entries have been canceled for any reason whatever, and the lands embraced therein have been subsequently entered under the homestead laws of the United States by parties innocent of fraud in procuring such cancelation, such Indians shall have the right to make entry elsewhere, and shall thereupon be entitled to patents for the lands so entered in lieu of the original tracts.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the Liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. For sale by Geo. W. Crouter.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A young man in Marietta, Md. was poisoned by his sweetheart, but he recovered, and now insists that the marriage engagement shall not be broken.

Mrs. Caroline Sheehey, of Staten Island, refused to take an oath on Good Friday, through conscientious scruples, hence the woman who had stolen Mrs. Sheehey's clothes was discharged.

—A man in Sacramento the other day bought a suit of new clothes, and threw away his old ones. After a while he remembered that he had left $110 in his old clothes, and went to find them, but was too late.

Twenty-six years ago a man went from Wilbraham, Mass., to California, leaving $700 as a loan to a farmer, in whom he put more trust than in savings banks. He wrote letters about the money from time to time, and supposed it was safely drawing interest. Recently he came across the continent to collect it, the sum of principal and interest amounting to $5,000; but the farmer, who is wealthy, refused to pay a cent, on the ground that the note was outlawed. The man had to borrow money with which to get back to California.

—One day last week, four citizens of Grand Island were playing a game of poker—five-cent "ante"—in a well-known saloon of that place. A dispute arose as to the game, when one of the parties made use of an expression about as follows: "I hope Christ will strike me if it isn't so." He had dealt the cards, and the betting on the hands was over, when he passed the pack to the next man on his left to deal. The dealer shuffled the cards and handed them back to the man to cut them, at the same time giving him a light slap to attract his attention. The man did not move. He was found to be stone dead. —Omaha Bee.

—A frightful accident, by which a man named Moritz Koch lost his life, occurred recently near Collinsville, Ill. Koch was engaged in digging an air shaft for the mines, and, having nearly reached the coal "entry," about 163 feet below the surface, he put in an unusually heavy blast of powder, thinking to complete the connection with the entry. Having set the fuse, he was hauled to the top, and soon after the powder exploded. Against the protest of his friends he immediately had himself lowered, but before reaching the bottom gave the signal for the top man to hoist him up. This was done instantly, but on nearing the surface he was seen to let go all hold, and fall to the bottom, a distance of 150 feet, and, of course, was crushed almost to a jelly.

Other People's Feelings and Failings.

Most of us have a very tender regard for our own feelings. We do not like to have them injured. We are amazed that people can be so rude and clumsy as to tread upon our toes, or roughly express to the air our scarcely-healed wound. But so weak is human nature and so prone are we to think less generously of others than of ourselves, that we often sin in the very way which we would be swiftest to condemn in our neighbors. It is a great delight to meet a man or woman who is always considerate, gentle and polite in his treatment of those he or she meets in daily life.

This topic came up around the breakfast-table in a city house one morning lately. You, happy readers, who live in the country, know comparatively little of the persistent annoyances which city folks undergo from the continual rappings and ringings and shoutings and screamings of people who go from door to door to buy, to sell, or to beg. The room in which the breakfast alluded to as being taken was a front basement, on a pleasant street, intersecting a busy thoroughfare. Coffee was poured, biscuits had been passed, eggs were being broken, fruit was being pared.

The speaker darkened the window with his head and dimmed the shining glass with his breath, as he hurled this remark, ascending, interrogative and declensive, at our shrinking ears. Somebody shook her curls at him pleasantly, and he departed with a jingling of bells at the hand-cart he was wheeling along, and a hearty cry of "Any r-a-a-gs?" gradually lessening in the air as he went his way.

Interruption No. 2: "Please, ma'am, any cold meat and bread?"

It is a little, blue-looking, pinched-looking mite of a boy, with a basket nearly as big as himself. "Don't discourage professional beggars," says the gentleman of the house.

"O! my dear," returns the lady, as she sweeps the contents of the bread-plate into the not fastidiously clean receptacle. "I can't refuse a child when he looks as hungry as that little fellow does, just think. It might be our own Harry!"

Interruption No. 3: Man rings the door-bell violently. Domestic responds. Presently she enters and inquires if the mistress can step out and look at some prize packages of stationery, etc.

"No!" cries paterfamilias, loud enough to be heard outside. "Tell him to be off with his trash!"

"My dear," the lady urges, seriously, having dismissed the children first, "I do wish you would not be so impolite in your manner to tramps and peddlers. It is their only way of earning a livelihood, and I think Christians ought to be kind to them."

"I fully agree with you. Your sentiments and mine precisely correspond, but your patience is greater than mine, you see. How you endure it, staying here all day, too, is quite beyond me to comprehend. I believe in politeness to one's equals and superiors—but I won't take my hat off to inferiors."

"A tramp is not necessarily your inferior, my friend," observed the Philosopher, who happened to be staying at the house, and who was giving lectures in the lyceum course. "I have heard of tramps who had at one time been millionaires, and of others who had received the education of a university."

"I shouldn't wonder," said Madame, meditatively balancing her spoon on the transparent edge of her Sevres teacup —"I shouldn't wonder if you called Homer a tramp, or Diogenes, if either of them were living now."

"Very likely," replied Monsieur, taking up the newspaper, to find out whether our Representative in Congress had been giving any more National subjects lessons on good manners. And then the talk drifted to the affairs of the day, what engagements each had, what visits were to be made, what shopping done, which closets cleaned, etc., etc.

One person only remembered the morning's discussion, and sat down to think upon this matter of courtesy. And she came to the conclusion that courtesy is a word of very wide meaning. It is an index finger to character. You observe a true lady, a true gentleman, anywhere. They cannot commit a rudeness. It would hurt them and jar them to wound the feelings of the lowest and the farthest below them. To be truly polite implies that one shall be thoughtful of the feelings of everybody, out of interiors most of all.

When are we to begin our training in this regard?

With our little children, at once. Do not permit Susy or Jamie, unreproved, to bother or tease or annoy Bridget in the kitchen. Never let them allude to her as the "servant-girl," or speak of "servant-girls" in her presence. The phrase may define her position, but she does not like to hear it, and it takes off the bloom of their refinement every time they use it. Do not jump to pick up your own thimble which has rolled away when Charlie is in the room. Let him bring it to you, and say "Thank you" to him for the kindness.

Do not encourage in yourself the habit of criticising and commenting upon the foibles or faults of any member of your own family. There is nothing gained by it, and a great deal is lost. Love itself is often choked back and hindered in its growth by the rank sturdiness of weeds which spring up against it, unchecked, in houses where people say all manner of ungentle speeches to each other.

If you want to cultivate real happiness, cultivate goodness. Think more of others' excellent qualities than of their failings, and be gentle and amiable to all.—Christian at Work.

Kicking a Bear.

Jack was in the woods, on his way home from the sap trees, where he had been boiling maple sugar. It was a mild day in March. The snow was six feet deep, and the warm spring air had softened the surface so that no one could walk on it without snow-shoes, a pair of which Jack had on his feet.

He was unarmed. As he walked on, he came to a fallen tree directly in his way. He stepped upon it, but as he did so, a large bear rose up behind it and rushed at him with open jaws.

The warm air had roused the creature from her winter sleep and she was furious with hunger.

Taken wholly by surprise, Jack gave a tremendous leap which carried him a distance of ten feet from the trunk of the tree. But he sank deeply into the snow, and the bear was upon him before he could extricate himself.

Then the battle began, man and beast rolling over and over each other in a desperate struggle. As often as the bear tried to seize him with her teeth, or overpower him with the fatal hug, Jack would save himself by kicking her on the nose with his snow-shoes.

Finally, with one fierce plunge of claws and teeth, the brute fastened upon Jack, and failing to hold him, tore off almost all his clothing at a single sweep.

Fortunately just at this moment he hit the top of her nose a powerful kick. A blow on the end of the nose causes pain so acute as to disable a bear for a time, and it had the effect in this case.

The brute gave back a little, and, while she was wincing under the pain, Jack regained his feet and got several steps away.

His assailant started after him again, but the snow was so soft she almost buried herself at every step, while Jack walked on the surface and escaped. So his snow-shoes, which rendered him a clumsy lighter, finally saved his life.—Forest and Stream.

A Prairie-Dog Village.

Four hundred and thirty-five miles west of Omaha is situated the great Prairie-Dog City, one of the largest settlements on the line of the Union Pacific Railroad. Several hundred acres, each side of the track, have been taken up by the sagacious little prairie-dogs, and there they have made their homes, and that without buying one lot from the company, or as much as saying "by your leave." The dwellings consist of little mounds, from a foot to eighteen inches in height, raised by the dirt excavated by their burrows. On the approach of a train, the little inhabitants can be seen scampering for their homes. Arrived there, they squat upon their haunches or stand upon their hind feet at the entrance a hole in the top, barking at the train as it passes. Should anyone venture too near, down they go, and their city is as silent as the "city of the dead." It is said that the opening in the top leads to a subterraneous chamber connecting with the next dwelling, and so on through the settlement, but this is a mistake. The prairie-dog is of a sandy-brown color, and about the size of a large gray squirrel. In their nest, living with them, are found the owl and the rattlesnake, though whether welcome or not is uncertain. He lives upon grasses and roots, and is generally fat, and is by some, Mexicans especially, considered good eating, and his flesh is sweet and tender though rather greasy. Wolves prey on the little fellows, and may be seen sneaking near the town, hoping by chance to pick up some straggler. But the dogs are not easily caught. Some one is always on the lookout for danger, and gives the alarm on the first intimation of trouble. Then away they all scamper to their holes.—Omaha Herald.

The Telephone Without a Magnetic Battery—Interesting Experiment.

Much is said and many descriptions given of the telephone, the phonograph and aerophone in the periodicals of the day, but one of, perhaps, the most simple forms and one of the most practical, seems to have almost escaped notice. The form operated through the assistance of the magnetic battery, in consequence of the perhaps unlimited distance over which it may be operated, as well as its general adaptability to nearly all circumstances, is, and probably will be, of most general use. Still it has the serious faults of indistinctness of articulation, if unnatural, metallic and resonant sound of the voice, and repetition of sabbled workmanship in its construction. The same fault in sound applies to the simpler form of—falls and reports farming as unprofitable.

Chloride of lime is cheap, and it should be applied freely to all cellars. The past winter and spring has been hard on vegetables, and many cellars are in a foul condition. As life and health are valuable, neglect not this precaution.

At the Canada Dairymen's Association, the President contended that "the cows get as much milk in winter as in summer, and he found his cows fell off in quantity of milk when first turned to grass. He thought milk could be as cheaply produced in winter as in summer, unless the cows were kept largely by soiling. The general system of pasturing was very wasteful of land. Winter butter brought even a better price than summer-made butter."

The National Live Stock Journal is for more schools: "We have reached a new departure, which must soon be introduced—practical dairy schools, for the more thorough education of dairymen, and the advancement of this great industry. The factories have done, and will continue to do much; but they are not schools of experiment, schools of discovery, schools for the demonstration of the true road."

Homestead Drainage.

The question of drainage is one of the most important with which the farmers of the West have to deal. In this the drainage of the house lots and grounds is of the first importance, especially so since this may be accomplished at a comparatively light cost, when we compare the value returned. When the barn yard and its surroundings are directly connected, or in close proximity to the house and the well, from which the daily drinking water of the family is drawn, the question of drainage often becomes more serious, and for this reason: The water of drainage sinks from the surface directly to the water-line in the earth, and thence horizontally, or along the natural declivity of porous strata, to the nearest outlet. In a majority of cases this will be found to be to the well. Why? If for no other reason, from the well-known fact that insect life, during drought, leave for the nearest living water, the well, and when the rains again saturate the earth, direct open channels are thus left where the water of drainage flows, loaded with the secretions of the sinks, the privy and the barnyard. Hence it will be at once seen that every precaution should be used to cut off and conduct away these accumulations by means of underdrains.

Next to this source of disease, undrained cellars are prolific breeding places of miasma. It is safe to say that of the farm cellars of the West, and not one quarter of the farm houses are provided with cellars at all, fourfifths are without sufficient drainage, and for the reason that it is considered impractical to drain them. Even where a lame attempt at drainage is made, the water ways are generally of plank or other perishable material, without traps to prevent the return of foul gases, thus adding to the danger of infection by miasma. Those who have made this mistake should lose no time in taking up these drains and laying others of vitrified pipe which may be cheaply bought in any city.

There are very few farm house sites in the West where the drainage is not comparatively easy; few places where forty rods of drain will not give a perfect outlet for the cellar over seven feet deep. Nevertheless if such be the case, the only way is to continue the drain until a sufficient outfall is reached. In the ditch, after the bottom is carefully leveled so the fall will be equal, lay three-inch glazed pipe, with shoulders so one may be fitted in the other and cemented tight; else there will be leakage at the joints, the ground will be saturated, decomposition will cause, and malaria be surely generated. Just after the drain leaves the cellar a joint of pipe should be laid forming an elbow or V. This serves as a trap to keep all foul gases from entering the cellar, and below this trap one from the sink and other conveniences of the house where water is used, may be inserted, being careful in every case to guard each separate pipe with a trap next where the water enters from the house. It would also be well to lay a pipe from the well connecting with the cellar drain below the trap. Thus the sewer may be flushed during droughts and washed clean at will by means of a tank connected therewith. If a windmill is need the whole will be simplified.

The outlet to the cellar drain requires looking after. If it do not end in a running stream, the deposit should not be allowed to accumulate. Some means for saturating and removing the deposit should be used at such seasons as will not permit its running away. If no other means are at hand it may be planted with willows, or other trees that flourish strongly by their roots. Instances of trees planted to drain sewers and catch basins absorbing by their roots the noxious principles contained therein would seem to be pretty well authenticated, and it deserves extensive trial.—Prairie Farmer.

Planting Corn Does Not Insure the Gathering.

THE farmers upon our broad Western prairies cease as near, perhaps, gathering the average crop, from year to year, without labor as any other people, but it so happens that the crops which grow spontaneously are the most persistent enemies the slothful farmer has to contend with. In view of this, the prudent husbandman begins away back at the time of the ripening and maturing of the seed germs, which constitute the incipient stages of the future crop, to gather up and keep in store the forces which shall combine to bring forth the desired results. The seed corn must not only be gathered as soon as it arrives at a state of maturity and placed in a state of perfect preservation, but the largest and ripest ears must be selected, so that the quality of the succeeding crops may in every particular be equal to the seed which produced it. After the seed has been secured in good order, as of the first importance, a place congenial must by provided in which to plant it. The cornfield may be either large or small, but the land must be in condition for the cultivation of corn, according to the skill of the farmer, or to the extent which he may contract to do. The conditions and requirements of this redundant plant. Other crops may be poisoned and ruined by an over supply of nitrogen, but corn will take care of some kinds of manures, while the corn grows space and delights in the abundant richness.

Soils can hardly be too fertile for this tropical plant. If the land is rich, it seems to contain all the elements for a heavy yield of grain.

The land is not always fertile in the qualities which bring the best results. It does have been observed by many, but a succession of crops has exhausted it of the proper constituents, and the seed-corn is seldom saved in the best manner; so we must take these things as we find them, as it is so near planting time now. After the wet, open winter which has passed, much of the land will be inclined to bake, so that the earlier the plowing is done the more time the soil will have to become pulverized and assume its normal ameliorated condition. The old idea of waiting until cornplanting time before plowing the ground to have a fresh place to plant in, is erroneous. Our advice is, to plow as soon as the ground is in condition, if that occurs in the month of March. If plowed so early, the ground becomes settled, packed down, and with a level and well pulverized surface, the planter may be passed over the ground with much less labor, and the seed corn placed at a uniform depth under the surface, so that it will germinate with greater certainty, come up quicker and grow with more vigor than when placed at some indefinite distance beneath the surface. Such early plowed land holds the moisture better than that plowed later, and the atmosphere can more readily circulate through it.

With good seed corn, the ground plowed and prepared in the proper manner, and the corn cultivated thoroughly before and soon after it comes up—the Western farmer seldom fails to realize a large yield of grain of excellent quality. Every operation in the production of corn may be hurried except in planting. We do not think it pays to plant corn before the soil gets warm enough to sprout readily, unless later than the middle of May, north of 41 degs. north latitude. There will this year, no doubt, be much bad seed corn, as there has been in years past, and every precaution should be used to guard against the deficiency that the individual failures, as is frequently occur, may be avoided.—Western Rural.

AGRICULTURAL BREVITIES.

—The following agricultural and domestic brevities are taken from the Iowa State Register:

Spring is as far advanced in Europe as in America—both being a month earlier.

A balky horse, is nearly always a living witness of the incapacity or inattention of some man.

A well-ordered and well-cultivated lawn is a true evidence of good taste and refinement.

The fence applied in this country by ignorance and carelessness in manufacturing, if well made, would soft enough more to soon pay the National debt.

The speculative farmer is the man of large means and a small stock of practical sense. He invests his money in expensive buildings, and unavailable stock—falls and reports farming as unprofitable.

Chloride of lime is cheap, and it should be applied freely to all cellars. The past winter and spring has been hard on vegetables, and many cellars are in a foul condition. As life and health are valuable, neglect not this precaution.

Longneckar is.

A Gallant Act.

Life is full of opportunities for self-sacrificing heroism, which every day and then meets us in unexpected places. Of this truth the terrible ride to death of one of Barnum's circus drivers last week affords a sublime illustration. He had driven over to his home in or near Ninth avenue, with a team of six splendid coal-black horses, and an empty baggage wagon. The animals had been highly fed, had no work to do, were ready for their spring campaign, and were in splendid condition. He said that the two leaders weighed 1,200 pounds each, and the pole horses 1,300. Returning he passed under the elevated railroad; an engine let off steam; the horses, startled, sprang into a run down

The popular impression that a great many of the Government lands were sold at discount, and that thereby a heavy loss was incurred, is not correct. None of the lands since Buchanan was President have been sold at less than par. On the other hand many have been sold at a premium. We have somewhere seen a statement which we presume to be authentic, to the effect that the treasury has received from these premiums nearly sixty-five millions of dollars.

A scheme is reported to be on foot in Illinois to bring out Gen. John A. Logan for State Treasurer this fall. It is believed by his friends that thorough canvass of the State by him would result in the election of a Republican Legislature, and that a Republican Legislature would immediately solve the problem of Illinois politics by returning Gen Logan to the United States Senate. Gen. Logan denies that he is working up any such programme.

Senator Dorsey, of Arkansas, and Representative Hubbell, of Michigan, the two members of the Republican Congressional Committee to whom is entrusted the duty of raising funds for the coming campaign, report that they are meeting with encouraging success. Republican Senator-thave all contributed $100 each, and Republican Representatives are following their example. Heads of departments and bureaus, and clerks, will be invited to subscribe, although every one will be assured that contributions are not to be obligatory, and that a refusal to subscribe to the campaign fund will not endanger the official tenure of any one.

Says the Cincinnati Gazette: "Let all the alleged frauds in connection with the late Presidential election be thoroughly and fairly investigated, and the result will show that Hayes was entitled to fifty more electoral votes than were counted for him. The Republican members in Congress will join the Democrats in favor of such an investigation. Let the facts come out, not only in reference to Louisiana and Florida, but Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, Indiana, Ohio, New Jersey, New York and Connecticut also. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what is wanted." Yes, it is what the Republicans want, but it is just what the Democrats don't want and what they must fear.

The Washington correspondent of the Detroit Post & Tribune speaks with well merited commendation of the Republicans of Mr. Conger's Congressional District for their course in keeping him so long in Congress. By this they have secured one of the most efficient legislators, standing to day as a prominent leader in the House. This he has acquired by his long experience. Mr. Hubbell, of the Upper District, is also making his mark and increasing his influence. The correspondent gives a needed admonition to the other Districts, and speaks well when he says: "No member, whatever his capacity may be, can become sufficiently acquainted with the forms of legislation, the rules of the House and the order of business, in a single term, and at the end of the session he has just begun to make himself really useful. If an honest man, with fair capacity, the longer he is kept in Congress after that, the more effectually he can serve his constituents and the State." Of Congressman Stone he says: "Though Judge Stone has not yet attempted to show his skill in debate, he has efficiency as a working member, and will, when occasion present, take his part in the discussion of the two important questions now before Congress." And he adds: "With experience, then, the Michigan delegation in Congress will reflect credit on the State, and justify the wisdom of their constituents in keeping them in the House, in the first place till they had been educated in legislative affairs, and then because they have thereby become doubly useful to them."

OLD MISSION NURSERY

Apple Trees $8 per 100.

For 30 days I will sell a block of apple trees at the Nursery that are too large to buy, or handle, at the low price of $8 per 100. Bring your spade and help dig and select to suit yourself.

I will furnish teams to deliver at the dock free of charge.

I have an immense stock of extra fine 3 and 4 year old apple trees, of all the leading hardy varieties which I will sell at $15 per 100 bundled and delivered at the boat. I send out none but sound large thrifty trees, six to seven feet high.

50 trees at 100 rates.

This nursery has no connection with the inferior stock delivered around the country a few years ago by one Adams.

I have more good trees than all other nurseries together in the Traverse region and will sell as low at any time as good trees can be grown for.

Address C. P. AVERY,
Old Mission, Mich.

We warrant all varieties true to name, and employ no irresponsible peddlers. C. P. A.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan County of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate Office, in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 25th day of January, A. D. 1878.

Present, J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Newton Youman, praying that a certain instrument now on file in this County, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that Addie E. Hayes may be appointed executor thereof. Therefore, it is ordered, that Monday, the 22d day of February next at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden, at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be printed in the Charlevoix SENTINEL, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

J. MILO EATON, Judge of Probate.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 7th, the Post-office Appropriation bill was reported back from committee, with sundry amendments, and placed on the calendar. The House bill to forfeit the further interest of United States land-grant notes was on motion of Mr. Sherman read a second time. The Pension Appropriation bill was then taken up and several amendments were agreed to. In the House, the Senate bill to increase the military force of government for the Federal prisoners was passed. A motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Tariff bill was agreed to—105 to 98—and Mr. Banks spoke in opposition to the bill. A bill was introduced and referred to provide for a Tariff Commission.

In the Senate, on the 8th, the House bill to extend the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes was referred to the Committee on Finance. The House joint resolution to amend the joint resolution of July 8, 1870, authorizing the Secretary of War to manufacture, to provide duplicate medals to be issued to the Territories as well as to the States, not exceeding 60 stand of arms to each Territory, was amended so as to provide that the present quota of the State shall not be diminished by the issue of such additional issue and the resolution as amended, was passed. Several amendments to the Indian Appropriation bill were disposed of. In the House, Mr. Potter announced that the Committee on Commerce as follows: Cox (N. Y.), Hale, Perry, Ingham, Smith (Ohio), Caldwell, Hatcher, Badeau, Jorgensen, Ewan and Williams (Ore.). The Committee on Elections reported in the contested-election cases from the Second Rhode Island Congressional District, and from Georgia, the Clerk designating the sitting members. Cain, Chittenden and Williams testified to the seats, which report was adopted. The Tariff bill was taken up in the Committee of Whole, and Messrs. Fernando Wood, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, spoke in its favor.

In the Senate, on the 9th, the bill to provide for the distribution of awards made under the Convention between the United States and Mexico, concluded on the 4th of July, 1868, was considered in secret session and afterward passed. Several amendments to the Indian Appropriation bill were agreed to, and the bill was passed. The conference report on the bill regulating the advertising of mail-bidders was agreed to. The bill to repeal the Bankrupt law was further debated. In the House, a joint resolution was passed for the enforcement of the Eight-Hour law in all departments of the Government. The Senate bill authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada and Dakota Territories to fell and remove timber on the public lands for mining and domestic purposes was passed, with an amendment providing that such lands shall not be open to the general operations by the cutting of timber. Further debate was had on the bill to repeal the Bankrupt law, after which the House went into Committee of the Whole, and Mr. Kelley, of the Ways and Means Committee, made an argument against the measure, and Mr. Darrall (Ark.), of the same committee, spoke in favor of the bill.

THE HOUSE joint resolution relating to advertising the expenditure of $36,000, of the $2,000 appropriated, to give greater stability to the foundation of the Washington Monument, was passed in the Senate, on the 10th. The bill to repeal the Bankrupt law was taken up and an amendment was agreed to—27 to 22—providing that the repeal shall take effect Sept. 1, 1878. The bill was so amended, was passed. Adjourned to the 13th. A bill was passed in the House, providing that the notice of contest, under the Pre-emption, Homestead and Timber-Culture laws, must be printed in newspapers in the county where such contest lies. A bill appropriating $3,150 to Richard Barker, of Virginia, for slaves and supplies taken by the United States Army during the war, gave rise to considerable discussion as to claims in general, and heated remarks were indulged in by Messrs. White (Pa.) and Hunton (Va.). Toward the close of the controversy, Mr. White having been called to order and paying no attention to the call, Mr. Turney (Va.) approached him with clenched fist and demanded to know why he did not take his seat. The two gentlemen were led to their respective seats by their friends, and the bill was finally passed.

SENATE not in session on the 11th. ....Bills were passed, in the House—for the relief of settlers on public lands; providing that any person who shall plant and cultivate for eight years ten acres of timber land shall be entitled to a patent for a full quarter-section permitting Nebraska to cede certain territory to Missouri; providing for the sale of timber lands in California, Oregon, Washington Territory, Nevada and Colorado, in quantities not exceeding 160 acres to any one citizen, at a minimum price of $2.50 per acre, and making it unlawful to cut such timber on public lands. A bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands and referred to the Committee of the Whole, providing for the issue of $800 to every person who shall settle on the public lands under the Homestead law, after he has been honorably discharged. Others have been thus expended.

A BILL was introduced in the Senate, on the 13th, to levy, by the Moffett bell-punch, a tax on liquors in all places in the District of Columbia where intoxicating liquors are sold by the drink. Several amendments to the Pacific Railroad Appropriation bill were agreed to. In the House, Mr. Potter presented a resolution directing an investigation, by a select committee of five, into the alleged frauds committed in Florida and Louisiana in the late Presidential election. After considerable discussion, the Speaker decided that the preamble and resolution were not in order at this time. Mr. Springer's amendment was then read, and passed. A motion was made to reconsider the vote, and a motion to lay the motion to reconsider was agreed to—125 to 118, Mr. Hubbard, Mr. Potter and Mr. Springer voting in the affirmative. The bill, which, as amended, was reported, was then read. Mr. Potter moved to recommit the bill, but asked to be allowed to file his report and on subsequently according to that motion. He opened the question of alleged frauds by other than the States named in the resolution, and defined Democratic supremacy as meaning that it was not germane to the resolution, and would be of no practical effect. Mr. Hiscock, after insisted upon the previous question, the Republican members refused to vote. Rules ordering the previous question and voting. The Army Appropriation bill was reported. A bill was passed prohibiting the further coinage of three and five-cent silver pieces, and declaring subsidiary silver coin a legal tender in amounts not exceeding twenty dollars.

A WASHINGTON telegram of the 10th says the Secret-Service Division had received information that $100 counterfeit notes had made their appearance in Chicago. They are on the Second National Bank of Wilkesbarre, Pa., and the National Revere Bank of Boston, Mass., and were transferred from the counterfeit plate of the Merchants' National Bank of New Bedford, Mass. The work is well executed, and all National Bank notes of this denomination should be carefully examined, as other counterfeit issues from the same plate are likely to be produced.

THE sixty-eighth anniversary of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, was held in New York, on the night of the 12th. The Board was organized in 1810, and since then has sent 530 ordained missionaries to all parts of the world. They are now working in forty-six different tongues, among various races and climes, virtually giving the gospel to 100,000,000 people. They have educated more than 400,000 pupils and organized 350 churches, with a membership of 38,000. The present number of laborers from America, men and women, is 261, of whom 151 are ordained missionaries. There are 1,100 native laborers aiding in the work.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

HENRY C. PLESSNER, who ran away from East Saginaw on the 19th of April, short in his accounts, has been arrested in Canada on the charge of forgery.

WILLIAM SCHMIDT, a clerk-boy at the Stauber Hotel, in East Saginaw, committed suicide the other night by hanging himself with the same rope by which his father shuffled off his mortal coil two months before.

REARDEN'S shingle-mill, at Coldwater Station, on the Flint & Pere Marquette Railway, was recently destroyed by fire. Loss, $6,000.

THE old saying that "lightning never strikes twice in the same place" was lately proved untrue at Zeeland, near Holland. The residence of D. Vyn, which was struck ten days before, was again struck, and badly damaged, demolishing the entire chimney from top to bottom, the lightning escaping out of a front window, where it left a round hole in the glass. A second time the large family escaped without any bodily injury.

BY the fall of the floor of the new Mansfield Market, in Detroit, a few days ago, three workmen, John Foster, Jacob Klein and Joseph Kuster, were severely injured. Klein, who is a married man with a family, is not expected to live. Foster had one leg broken and Kuster's arm was fractured.

THE Fayette Pioneer learns that Governor Croswell has issued an order to discontinue the Land Office at Traverse City, and transfer its business and archives to the office at Reed City.

A DASTARDLY attempt was made, on the night of the 7th, to poison the family of a son of William Cook, a wealthy farmer living a few miles from Ypsilanti, by putting strychnine in the pump. The presence of the drug was discovered before anyone had partaken of the water. Mysterious arsenic poison was put in the water to kill a hundred families. The residence of the elder Cook was also fired. Suspicion rests strongly on a man in the neighborhood with whom the Cooks lately had a quarrel.

ON the night of April 20, a farmer, named Anthony Miller, nearly eighty years old, was murdered in the town of Norris, and his companion, Joseph S. Bolger, left for dead. The survivor said the crime was committed by half a dozen masked ruffians, who secured eight dollars as their plunder. A few days ago six persons were arrested in Detroit on suspicion, and two of them, Clarence McKee and Walter Allison, made confessions implicating the whole party and giving minute details. Subsequences relative to time and distance aroused suspicions, and on the 9th when an examination was had the whole party was discharged, it appearing that the confessions were false and procured by Acting-Inspector Samuel Moore, who, it is alleged, advised them that they could secure $250 reward and escape punishment by signing confessions. Allison and Detective Moore are now under arrest in charge of conspiracy. It is supposed that hope of reward and promotion actuated the latter.

THE balance of cash in the State Treasury April 27, 1878, was $779,275.50; receipts during the week ending May 4 were $37,000; payments during the same time were $17,-522.39; balance in Treasury May 4, 1878, $797,753.11. Decrease for the week, $58,378.39.

WHILE attempting to get out of the way of an approaching train at Manton, on the 9th, Angus Smith fell from the Manistee River Bridge and was drowned.

TWO YOUNGSTERS were fooling with a musket loaded with peas, at East Saginaw, on the evening of the 9th, when it was accidentally discharged, the contents lodging in Asa Willis' face, inflicting a dozen wounds. The lad's right eye was destroyed, and his injuries were thought to be fatal.

THE following occurred in the Township of Hamtramck, near Detroit, on the 9th, between Ferdinand Best and John Oeles. Best, getting into a quarrel and drawing a revolver, Oeles opponent in the breast and fled, pursued by a crowd, and fired on the crowd, but was finally overpowered by numbers and lodged in jail.

BISHOP MCCOSKRY has sent the following letter to Bishop Smith, of Kentucky, the Presiding Bishop, who has, in consequence, refused to call for a special meeting of the House of Bishops for June 17:

NEW YORK, May 4.

RIGHT REVEREND and DEAR BROTHER: I hereby withdraw my letter requesting the invocation of the 37th section of Michigan, dated March 11, 1878, and beg to inform you that I have abandoned my intention of going to Europe in consequence of painful events of recent occurrence. It is my duty to remain in the country for the present in order that I may be easily accessible to all whose duty it is to call for me. With the utmost desire to conciliate my character, I find it impossible to reconcile the course which have taken my position to the vague and ratified one put before the public by the newspaper rumors and strange and unexpected, yet emphatic and solemn denial of all the wonderful and startling assertions that I had been reported to have made. Public charges made by responsible parties, the short period of notice and the suffering of so many members of those brethren of the episcopate whose duty it is to be present at the meeting of consultation, I began this note by announcing the withdrawal of my request to call the meeting, but I will now add that I desire to conciliate it by saying that this is done in order

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, May 17, 1878.

To the Sentinel:

Another June bug has come and gone for nearly two months, and the temporary society of a little corner of the cage is missing of some who regretfully of letter by the fury of flames and the New World's form, as well as of those directions and who carelessly or wrongfully harassed the fellow-creatures, &c., no doubt it would repent for any slight chance for them to the congenial society of the Rose and Peach to the newer and more easily worked fields which our large cities present. It is much easier, however, that the owners of public cities voluntarily lay down and cease the water in any direction from a pistol shot for a treat and scamper into their native haunts as fast as legs would permit. Still such cases of occasionally occur, and in fact I now know of two instances of the kind at the present moment. In a small long Island town, where I have been several times during the year, there has lived since early in the present decade a young English man, whom family and friends have left here. The young man came a modest living as a bookkeeper, lives in an unpainted cottage with his wife and baby, and manages to save from urgently entreated to return to England means too well established and who no better to and whatever his pecuniary desire the "good countenance" of the English home.

The other day a gentleman of the Italian flotilla, who, upon arrival at the most dashing and popular restaurant at the Metropolis, the Delmonico, by the hospitality and the advantages which finally led him to America, so he has to be returned, but I assure you people are that it would cause, with any future departure from here, a most regretful and fascinating void. He landed in New York some twenty years since, and after a roving tour of the country settled down in quiet obscurity in the then quiet little town of Hoboken. The modest restaurant which he opened grew in favor and in size until it became a hotel which is to-day a favorite resort of lovers of fine Italian cookery and wine, boasts the title of its high born proprietor. Some of your readers may know the place from so much description, and it is even not impossible that some may have enjoyed its hot and cold, little supporting the rank of their fine looking and venerable host.

If gold were flowing out of the country at the rate its papers claim, there would be little hope of redemption January. All the European steamers are now crowded with a full cargo of the throng which the magnetic force of the paris exposition draws from every quarter. So strong are the attractions of the Champs de Mars, that nobody seems to be able to get away from it. One boat which, on its last westward trip took 150 cabin passengers to Europe, has just come back bringing one solitary passenger who, in his lonely majesty was, like Alexander Selkirk, "the march of all he surveyed."

All this makes rather a bad outlook for the American watering places, which will suffer this season, but it is a harvest to the steamship companies, who are making lots of money despite the low-ered fare. It is also largely swelling the business of the accident insurance companies, or rather company, for the Travelers', of Hartford, which is the only concern of the kind in the country amounting to much, is doing it all. Every sensible man takes out an accident policy when undertaking any important journey, and by the numerous agencies of this energetic corporation are so many heedless. The Travelers has paid already some two hundred thousand dollars on matured policy within a few years past, but it is to be hoped, for the sake of the thousands who are now reading themselves to the limit deep that its Exposition business this summer will be all clear profit. Altogether, this company has paid over thirty thousand accident claims, amounting to almost three millions of dollars and yet it grows larger and stronger every year.

It looks a little as though, in spite of the recent panic and depression, there was still to continue with good success among the intelligent and great benefits for settled. Recently the mysterious Carrie, whose many various about the coast of Maine suddenly appeared at Rondout, where, the Herald says, that Rondout people have entered of seventeen other American steamers for as well as packed. And it does seem a further comment than to see the fleet of steamers now in the Rondout of the great spring, which it and Pennsylvania does to give employment to more persons than during the entire year. The Rondout Courier says that during the past two days of the great harvest, such is the unusual food whatever, and the numerous vessels in which. What will be the grain carried to Europe, through the month and give it something to do.

And now that we are of physical labor are beginning to find out what labor belonged to and of any class about an American household will soon establish precisely the kind of digging there was, successive human volcanoes, etc. My boy's private rehearsal of this performance two or three days since, and as soon as I have gone through with the appointed task will commence digging in the cellar with a view to ascertaining if the coal is not there.

It is not much unpleasant that a fellow can't sing railroad songs. T. Curtis, who officiated as referee of the Erie, has just been awarded $13,000 for this service, and he did not hurt himself with hard work in the matter either. He claimed $80,000.

Oppression in Egypt.

Egypt is a country groaning beneath a frightful tyranny. Writing to an English journal, from Assouan, Mr. Douglas Murray says:

"Provisions, always dear, are now at higher prices than ever; and how the year's taxes will be raised in Upper Egypt is a mystery yet to be solved. I suppose those who can't pay will suffer the usual penalty the bastinado and imprisonment without food. They may die, and it matters nothing to the Government, which lives for the day, and apparently cares nothing for the future. The unfortunate people are constantly taken from their own hearths to work on the Khedive's estates and factories. A small proprietor is taken from the land he is cultivating. His canal and blinker are carried off to the factory, where it is all work and no pay. A moslcum of sugar cane or corn is all he gets till the mills have finished the season's work. His land is deserted. If he has crops they are ruined. He is promised payment, but never gets a farthing. The landholders are charged enormous rents, and every profession and trade pays for its license. Thousands of the bazaar shops are closed to escape taxes. Even a cook's boy has to pay $15 a year for a license, and a donkey boy pays not only for his own license, but for his donkey's. Every conceivable thing, animate or inanimate, is taxed. Soldiers are at present entirely unpaid, and officers have received nothing for about a year. Few of the civil servants, unless Europeans, have seen salaries for months. Such is the price Egypt has to pay for a progressive Prince, bent upon Europeanizing his country. The condition of his people is worse than that of the French in 1780. Will similar results follow? While his people are starving he has given five of his sons magnificent palaces, and his daughters, too, have princely abodes."

Mr. Murray says that this is his fourth visit to Egypt, and each year he finds the wretchedness greater. The deplorable aspect of the people, who, in many places, have that pinched look which only long continued starvation can give, largely takes away from the pleasure of traveling on the Nile. At Girgeh he found that the children's food was sugar-cane previously sucked by others.

Good Health, and How to Keep It.

There are few subjects, we imagine, around which cluster so many theories as the preservation of health. Let a person pass from one to another in a large company, making a few simple inquiries as to the best way to keep health, and not two in twenty will agree. Each one will give sage reasons for not accepting the theory last propounded. One is positive that half "the ills that flesh is heir to" are the results of improper food. There is much sound sense in that idea; but the trouble is to be sure what is improper food. Many start from the right point, but the abrupt divergences are amusing, as well as often bewildering. One asserts: "Too much meat is cool. It inflames, and fills the blood with impurities. Pure milk, good stale bread and fresh vegetables should constitute the chief part of our food. If this idea," they insist, "could only be accepted and acted upon, the next generation would be a strong, healthy race, pure-blooded, pure-hearted, generous and noble; for the mental qualities are as largely influenced by the physical condition as later is by the quality of the food that is used."

Another will earnestly argue that a vegetable diet will make pure, warm blood, and insure an indolent, effeminate people, while fresh meat is absolutely essential to a vigorous constitution, to an earnest, energetic character; that a diet largely of salt meat dries the blood and makes those who use it lean, sallow-faced, dissatisfied and dyspeptic.

After thus taking the opinion of a score of people one is inclined to doubt if wisdom is found in the multitude of counselors. We believe that it is as impossible to make rules for health that will apply to all as it is to find two constitutions exactly alike. "One believeth that he may eat all things," and he can; another, who is weak, eateth herbs, and should do so. After reaching what is called the age of discretion, each must, to a large extent judge for himself. Medical advice may be desirable, and sometimes indispensable, but physicians often find themselves in a dilemma, and all their skill, founded on what they think well-established theories, is at fault. They will tell a patient, "Use no fresh bread, but no fruit which is at least twenty-four hours old." The advice is followed, but the result proves disastrous. The stomach rejects such food, because acid and sore. By stealth, as it were, the patient ventures on a piece of well-raised, well-baked, sweet fresh bread, and is comforted. At that one time, if no other, the stomach was not in a state in which stale bread was beneficial, and in defiance of all medical rules craved and secured that which was found to be of great benefit.

Much fresh meat with some constitutions induces fulness of the head and a feverish state of the system, because it makes blood too fast. It should, therefore, be discarded, and a little salt meat or fish, if the appetite craves it with fresh fruit and vegetables, will be found probably to be just what the system requires.

In truth, with health, as in many other things, each person must be a law unto himself. In acute or minor matters they cannot decide. It is true that what is "one man's meat may be another man's poison," and a little poisoning now and then seems indispensable to teach us our individual physical as well as mental idiosyncrasies. Experience thus gained, if not carried to such excess as to prove too severe a schoolmaster, will be of more value through life than all the doctors in Christendom—with all respect be it spoken—beside saving many a long bill at the drug store.

As a general rule, it is not advisable to use hot bread too freely, though the effects produced by its use may often depend more upon the character of the bread than upon its temperature.

Neither salt meat or fish, nor fresh meat or fish, all the time, is advisable —though the salt food may be a little more economical. A judicious mingling of both is the better course. Good, healthy, well-cured pork, well cooked and used discreetly, is not injurious for a strong, healthy person engaged in active or outdoor pursuits, but we should if it is wise for students to use much, or for sedentary persons, or those at all inclined to humors or irruptive diseases.

It is not safe to allow so large a liberty to young children. They are not qualified for forming correct judgment, or governing themselves at all. Parents must do that for them. After they are safely through the teething period it is not necessary to confine them to a milk diet; but they still need the parent's restraining hand to withhold rich food, or stimulating condiments. Plain, simple but nourishing food, ripe fruit and berries in their season, are, we think, indispensable for growing children. But their meals should be regular and lunches between—and never just before retiring. Many a mother will give her very young children rich food—pastry, cake and sauces and condiments of the most indigestible or fiery kind—and tell you her children are healthy, and nothing hurts them. Perhaps the injury is not apparent at first, but it will not be long before headaches, indigestion of the most serious character, or dyspepsia, fixed for life, will be the harvest to be reaped from such injudicious and sinful indulgence. —Mrs. H. W. Beecher, in Christian Union.

New Bonnets.

New suggestions are found in the Paris bonnets brought out later in the season. The handsomest chips and straws are the inside of the front lined with dark velvet or satin, and edged with a single row of gold braid or else the new rainbow braid that has tinsel threads of many colors to match the rainbow beads; they have no other face trimming. A great many beige-colored chip bonnets are in the late importations. Some of these are trimmed throughout with the same shade, having watered beige ribbon strings, satin or gros grain loops, ostrich tips and picture-type Tyrolese velvet for a bandeau or fillet in front and for facing the brim and curtain. Other beige chips have deep cardinal red trimmings mixed with beige color, and for flowers a wreath of small strawberries with brown foliage. A few fancy in white chip bonnets is to have at intervals a rainbow tinsel braid. Some new chip bonnets are merely brims and curtain bands without crowns. The vacant space for the crown is surrounded with a wreath of flowers that form fringe, and this fringe fills in the empty crown. Gilt rings, through which the silk or satin is passed around the crown, are on many new hats. The large Alsacian hats in non sense of narrow dandy-faced ribbon in many loops, with several rails indented or notched like sawteeth. Many pipings are on the edges of straw bonnets; some have the piping folds alternating with gilt soutache. A double bow of satin ribbon is set on straw curtains, and covers them entirely. Many rough straws or else figured satin straw bonnets are shown; some are all black, some white, some beige color, and many have gilt braid interwoven in the black. For dress-bonnets for summer beige tulle is embroidered by band in colors, such as olive, pale blue or pink. Gilded Creek fillets are imported to put in the front of bonnets. Brooches of dead gold are the most successful ornaments. Thick fringes of balls fall from under upturned curtain bands; other bonnets have pleated crepe lisse under the curtain. A large gilt screw is an ornament of questionable taste seen on French bonnets. Loose fruit is worn than last season, though there are some luscious looking berries, cherries and plums. A novelty is a wreath made of loops of ribbon grass, in green stripes and in maple red, with many ends of the grass cut in trident forks. Sage-leaf wreaths in stylish shades of green, and for color they are mixed with scarlet poppies. Many entire wreaths are in beige shades; these look well when representing ripe cones, burs, thistles and seed pods, but the "corn and yellow" leaves are more especially popular; these are used on black and beige-colored bonnets. The olive shades of nasturtium make it a most popular flower. It is combined with Jacqueminot roses and spikes of white lilacs.

For little girls' hats the novelty is fine Manilla, with a wreath of flowers painted by hand on the soft brim. Wild flowers, poppies, blue bells and trailing arbutus are artistically painted on these pretty hats. Boyish-looking straw hats with rolled brims and flat crowns, or else round Derby crowns, are also shown for young girls; beside these are the pointed Japanese crowns and the picturesque Tyrolese, with the jaunty sailor hats.—Harper's Bazar.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Economy means cutting down needless expenses and buying only the actually necessary things, at the same time increasing and developing to the utmost all sources of profitable income.

—Connecticut farmers are hiring their hands for the summer season, at $16 to $20 per month, with board. Eighteen dollars is said to be the average price, but common laborers are very plenty at these figures.

To restore old kid gloves, make a thick mucilage by boiling a handful of flaxseed; add a little dissolved soap; then, when the mixture cools, with a piece of white flannel wipe the gloves, previously fitted to the hand. Use only enough of the mixture to take off the dirt, without wetting through the glove.

To make corn meal johnes, take three cupfuls of milk, warmed a little; two and a half cupfuls of yellow Indian meal; one and a half cupfuls of wheat flour; a good pinch of salt; one cupful of good sweet yeast. Set to rise in the morning (if wanted for supper), and when the sponge is light stir in three eggs well beaten, one half cupful of molasses and a small lump of butter melted. Let it stand another hour or so, and bake in gem pans, taking care to grease well and beat before dropping in the batter. Bake at least half an hour in a quick oven. As a "set" for gem pans does not bake a sufficient quantity at one time for us, I use any old tea and coffee cups that are chipped or with broken handles, and out of use; they turn out in just as pretty a shape, and then only the one baking is necessary.—Bessie Barton in Country Gentleman.

—Agricultural writers are inclined to recommend small farms. As well advocate doing business of any kind on a small scale. Better have a small farm paid for and well managed than to owe for a large one without the means to work it well. But if a farmer is able to own a large farm, and has the ability to manage it, no one need to waste any sympathy on him. Large farms are often poorly farmed, so are small ones. The difficulty is not so much with the size of the farm as with the capacity of the farmer. Good farming can be done just as well and more economically on a large farm than on a small one. Teams, implements and farm hands can be used to better advantage on the large farms, for the farmer can afford to have a variety suited to his needs. It is foolish to seek to get a large farm just for the sake of room, but if the large acres is really needed then we see no objection to it.—Husbandman.

Inasmuch as every farmer's wife must have the ordering and arranging of three meals a day for 365 days in the year, and as a good supply of vegetables is absolutely necessary to secure a good variety with the advancing changes, we gladly give place to the following suggestion from a farmer's wife, as to how many properly come within the limits of a good farmer's garden: Butter beans for early use, early and late peas, early and late cabbage, carrots for soups, celery for fall and winter use, corn planted at intervals for a long season, cucumbers for early use and for pickles, lettuce for whole summer long, musk and watermelons for their season, asparagus and sea-kale plants, rhubarb in permanent beds, annual flowers, among them the oaths and curses of the bantswain, who took the opportunity of silence to fix him in mind respecting the Captain and gut strapgaslced when his curses thawed out. Then we are quit planting the garden in a cramped place, but plant every thing in long rows and far enough apart to admit of the double cheap and plow. This three-fourths of the work is saved, and its thorough cultivation more certainly guaranteed.—Iowa State Register.

Enormous Wheat Crop.

The time has commenced. Every year there goes out a great blow about the prospective crop. This is done for a dishonest and selfish purpose of the great wheat marts. It has already commenced for this year's crop. This word is sent out from Chicago, April 12th, by the Associated Press dispatches that "the whole Northwestern spring wheat region shows an acreage of 50 per cents. greater than last year," and that 20 per cent. of last year's crop is still in the farmers' hands. What is the object and motive of this false and injurious statement? It is to injure the sale of whist little wheat is on hand, which is less than 10 per cent., instead of 20. Nor is the area of wheat greatly increased over last year. A few local editors, with the object of glorifying their neighborhoods, and cheering the spirits of their merchants and mechanics with the prospects of wealth in the future, have uncleely made extravagant statements of the amount of wheat sown. There is always a disposition to publish exaggerated larger crops of grain, the sale of large bogs and cattle, but no notice is taken of cases of loss crops, or of the sale of poor hogs or scrub cattle. The rose colors are prominent, but the dark unnoticed.

And we wish some statistician who blowed accurately about the fiery ordeal of a surplus wheat crop in Minnesota last fall to sell, and fifty millions in Iowa, etc., should tell us what has become of it. Did it go through the fire, go, Milwaukee, or St. Louis to market? What are their reports? By no device can one-half that amount be traced to Iowa or Minnesota, and yet these fabulous stories depress our wheat in Chicago, in New York and in Liverpool. And there are thousands of mortgages and judgments unpaid that would have been, if a true statement of the amount of wheat in these States had been given to the public.

One man tells he has a thousand bushels of wheat, when he has not half that amount. This is done to perpetuate his credit. A merchant in a town writes out that there are millions of bushels of wheat in the farmers' hands in his county, and so soon as it comes to market he will be able to meet his engagements cent. And in this way the merchant is deceived—he deceives others, and the world is deluded, and the farmer suffers all the consequences in the low price of the wheat. The story will be repeated every year, and every year the farmers will be swindled by these lying pretended gatherers of statistics.—Iowa State Register.

Parallels for the Phonograph.

It is quite common to try to assist our comprehension of the marvelous nature of the most splendid feats of scientific invention, by comparing them with something equivalent in the wildest conceivable flights of fancy. For instance, after submarine telegraphy had been accomplished everybody was told how much it surpassed the boast of Shakespeare's Ariel that he could put a girdle round the earth in forty minutes. It is a curious illustration of the estimate put on the phonograph that a report is had, not to the poets, but to Baron Munchausen, for a parallel. The truth is, in this case is so astonishing, it does so far beyond the bounds of credibility, as to seem stranger than the bold fictions of that noted raconteur. The Pall Mall Gazette says the phonograph "must have already reminded many persons of those frozen words which Munchausen's horn that became audible music when the thaw set in."

This comparison is apt, but it is by no means the happiest that might have been chosen. One of Addison's humorous papers in the Tatler is altogether more illustrative, and the fact that it did not occur to a writer in so scholarly a journal as the Pall Mall Gazette shows into what neglect the classics of Queen Anne's reign have fallen in our age. In the amusing fiction alluded to Addison professed to have come in possession of an unpublished journal of Sir John Mandeville, from which he published an extract. Among Sindbad's Eastern sights, together with a Dutch and French ship, being caught in the Polar regions and compelled to winter in Nova Zembla, the crews built huts of turf and amused themselves as best they could. A period of intense cold coming on they found themselves unable to be heard, although each sailor seemed to himself to talk as well as ever. This term of silence lasted for several months or weeks, when with a turn of the wind there came a thaw and the frozen words began to melt. First a crackling noise was heard, which was like the blowing of whispers, afterward syllables and short words, and at length the whole conversations and sentences and whole conversations were let loose, until all the congealed sorrow being expressed that the thing has happened as it has; but never a word is said about replacing it with a new one. Our clean, sound carriage is burrowed. It is brought back after sundown with a hole or two missing, perhaps a spoke broken, and the whole covered with a generous sprinkling of mud. The horse-rake grazes the ruts and the neighborhood and finds its way home with one or two teeth broken. A sharp saw and sharp chisels are borrowed, and the saw is brought into contact with nails, which does not improve either the set or the sharpness of the teeth, while the chisels usually have several suspicious nicks in them which plainly show they have been borrowed.

As with the tools and implements, so it is with books, periodicals, etc. A valuable book from our library is borrowed and taken to the borrower's home, where the children, usually with unclean hands, thumb over it till it looks like anything but its former self, while there may be several leaves missing, having been taken to supply the place of less convenient paper. Periodicals are borrowed, and, if returned at all, are in a sadly dilapidated condition. Many and many a valuable book have we lost by loaning, while the broken files of our papers show that we have loaned them, too. Happily there are a few borrowers who take good care of what they borrow, and try to return it in as good order as they received it, in default of which they replace it. To such persons we take pleasure in lending, and always shall. We think our readers have had some experience with these nuisances—borrowers—and can testify to what we have written above as not being one whit overdrawn, for we could cite many other incidents similar, and, no doubt, could they.—Practical Farmer.

The Farm Garden.

Farmers are so determined to follow the old arts of gardening that but few of them truly have gardens, even on the most scanty varieties and limited dimensions. A little square patch, too cramped for the team and plow, makes a given expensive and unpractical, except to the already overworked female portion of the family. Gardening, as it is now practiced, is advancing. Not everything should be planted in long rows, and frequently many things in one row do make it long enough. Have it in connection with a large field of potato patch, but as near as possible to the house for the convenience of the family. Either can and should be worked principally by the plow. But plant liberally of all the valuable garden fruits, vegetables and flowers. Raise and eat more of such things, and less of pork and soda bread. It is a poor economy that the head of the family or the children "don't like" this or that. Learn to like Jams and Jellys are all a matter of good education and good raising. And a family intended to be raised right, should be taught to eat more of fruits and vegetables, and less of condiments and meats. It is folly to talk of a race not liking tomatoes, onions, carrots, lettuce, celery, asparagus, cauliflower, egg-plant, etc., and yet eat and enjoy the filthiest and foulest weed of the vegetable kingdom that we may name, tobacco. Then we say quit planting the garden in a cramped place, but plant every thing in long rows and far enough apart to admit of the double cheap and plow. This three-fourths of the work is saved, and its thorough cultivation more certainly guaranteed.—Iowa State Register.

Astrology.

Charles Hoyte Wee, in Shasta County, and pursues agriculture. When he had sold his load of potatoes on the market he took his way to a female fortune teller and paid his dollar-bill to have her roll her eyes and begin:

"You livenn a farm. You are a true good young man. You would go a mile out of your way rather than hit a poor mosquito with a sledge hammer. You love a girl. Beware! She prefers another man. You have been bypo-cerite. Crush her memory from your heart this hour. You will soon meet a rich lady who will fall in love with you and lead you a life of blissful happiness—that's all—turn to the left as you get down stairs."

Charles reached the street with pale face, shining eyes and swelling heart, and he took from his pocket a photograph, tore it into strips, and kicked up behind in his rage as he hissed:

"Over six shilling squandered on that faithless girl this winter for peppermint rots and candy!"

When Charles was picked up at midnight he had crawled under a wagon in an alley and refused to get up.

"Boy!" began his Honor, in a voice which made the stove-pipe tremble, "you are too pure and innocent for this wicked world. Bijah will hunt up your other suspender and the bottle of half-dive which were taken from you, and then you skit for the blessed country and swallow enough rose-buds to bring on the galloping consumption."

Charles fled! He "don't" was all he said as he went.—Detroit Free Press.

Oppression in Egypt.

Egypt is a country groaning beneath a frightful tyranny. Writing to an English journal, from Assouan, Mr. Douglas Murray says:

"Provisions, always dear, are now at higher prices than ever, and how the year's taxes will be raised in Upper Egypt is a mystery yet to be solved. I suppose those who can't pay will suffer the usual penalty, the lash and imprisonment without food. They may die, and it matters nothing to the Government, which lives for the day, and apparently cares nothing for the future. The unfortunate people are constantly taken from their own homes to work on the Khedive's estates and factories. A small proprietor is taken from the land he is cultivating. His camel and donkey are carried off to the factory, where it is all work and no pay. A modicum of sugar cane or corn is all he gets till the mills have finished the season's work. His land is deserted. If he has crops they are ruined. He is promised payment, but never gets a farthing. The landholders are charged enormous rents, and every profession and trade pays for its license. Thousands of the bazaar shops are closed to escape taxes. Even a cook's boy has to pay $15 a year for a license, and a donkey boy pays not only for his own license, but for his donkey's. Every conceivable thing, animate or inanimate, is taxed. Soldiers are at present entirely unpaid, and officers have received nothing for about a year. Few of the civil servants, unless Europeans, have even salaries for months. Such is the price Egypt has to pay for a progressive Prince, built upon Europeanizing his country. The condition of his people is worse than that of the French in 1789. Will similar results follow? While his people are starving he has given five of his sons magnificent palaces, and his daughters, too, have princely shades."

Mr. Murray says that this is his fourth visit to Egypt, and each year he finds the wretchedness greater. The deplorable aspect of the people, which is in many places, have that pinched look which only long continued starvation can give, largely takes away from the pleasure of traveling on the Nile. At Girgeh he found that the children's food was sugar-cane previously sucked by others.

New Bonnets.

New suggestions are found in the Paris bonnets brought out later in the season. The handsomest chips and straws have the inside of the front lined with dark velvet or satin, and edged with a single row of gold braid or else the new rainbow braid that has tinsel threads of many colors to match the rainbow beads; they have no other face trimming. The vacant space for the crown is surrounded with a wreath of flowers that form fringe, and this fringe fills in the empty crown. Still more unusual is a bonnet of white satin is passed around the crown, are on many new hats. The large Alsacian bow is now made of narrow double-faced ribbon in many loops, with several ends indented or notched like saw teeth. Many pipings are on the edges of straw bonnets; some have the piping folds alternating with gilt soutache. A double bow of satin ribbon is set on straw curtains, and covers them entirely. Many rough straws or else figured satin straw bonnets are shown; some are all black, some white, some beige color, and many have gilt braid introduced, or else white lines are interwoven in the black. For dress bonnets for summer beige tulle is embroidered by hand in colors, such as olive, pale blue or pink. Gilded Greek fillets are imported to put in the front of bonnets. Brooches of dead gold are the most successful ornaments. Thick fringes of beads fall from under upturned curtain bands; other bonnets have pleated crepe lisse under the curtain. A large gilt screw is an ornament of questionable taste seen on French bonnets. Less fruit is worn than last season, though there are some luscious looking berries, cherries and plums. A novelty is a wreath made of loops of ribbon grass, in green stripes and in maple red, with many ends of the grass cut in strident forms. Sugeded wreaths have stylish shades of green, and for color they are mixed with scarlet poppies. Many entire wreaths are in beige shades; these look well when representing pine cones, burs, thistles and seed pods, but the "corn and yellow" leaves are more especially popular; these are used on black and beige-colored bonnets. The olive shades of mignonette make it a most popular flower. It is combined with Jacqueminot roses and spikes of white lilacs.

For little girls' hats the novelty is fine Manilla, with a wreath of flowers painted by hand on the soft brim. Wild flowers, poppies, bleets and trailing arbutus are artistically painted on these pretty hats. Boyish-looking straw hats with rolled brims and flat crowns, or else round Derby crowns, are also shown for young girls; beside these are the pointed Japanese crowns and the picturesque Tyrolean, with the jaunty sailor hats.—Harper's Bazar.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Economy means cutting down needless expenses and buying only the actually necessary things, at the same time increasing and developing to the utmost all sources of profitable income.

—Connecticut farmers are hiring their hands for the summer season, at $16 to $20 per month, with board. Eighteen dollars is said to be the average price, but common laborers are very plenty at these figures.

—To restore old kid gloves, make a thick mucilage by boiling a handful of flaxseed; add a little dissolved soap; then, when the mixture cools, with a piece of white flannel wipe the gloves, previously fitted to the hand. Use only enough of the cleaner to take off the dirt, without wetting through the glove.

—To make corn meal puues, take three cupfuls of milk, warmed a little; two and a half cupfuls of yellow Indian meal; one and a half cupfuls of wheat flour; a good pinch of salt; a cupful of good sweet yeast. Set to rise in the morning (if wanted for supper), and when the sponge is light stir in three eggs well beaten, one half cupful of molasses and a small lump of butter melted. Let it stand another hour or so, and bake in gem pans, taking care to grease well and heat before dropping in the batter. Bake at least half an hour in a quick oven. As a "set" of gem pans does not bake a sufficient quantity at one time for us, I use any old tea and coffee cups that are "chipped" or with broken handles, and out of use; they turn out in just as pretty a shape, and then only the one baking is necessary.—Jessie Barton in Country Gentleman.

—Agricultural writers are inclined to recommend small farms. As well advocate doing business of any kind on a small scale. Better have a small farm paid for and well managed than to owe for a large one without the means to work it well. But if a farmer is able to own a large farm, and has the ability to manage it, no one need to waste any sympathy on him. Large farms are often poorly farmed, so are small ones. The difficulty is not so much with the size of the farm as with the capacity of the farmer. Good farming can be done just as well and more economically on a large farm than on a small one. Teams, implements and farm hands can be used to better advantage on the large farms, for the former can afford to have a variety suited to his needs. It is foolish to seek to get a large farm just for the sake of room, but if the large farm is fully utilized then we see no objection to it.—Husbandman.

—Inasmuch as every farmer's wife must have the ordering and arrangement of three meals a day for 365 days in the year, and as a good supply of vegetables is absolutely necessary to secure a good variety with the advisable changes, we gladly give place to the following suggestion from a farmer's wife, in which she may properly come within the limits of a good farmer's garden: Butter beans for early use, early and late beets, early and late cabbage, carrots for soups, celery for fall and winter use, corn planted at intervals for a long season, cucumbers for early use and for pickles, lettuce the whole summer long, musk and watermelons for their season, asparagus and pie-plant in permanent beds, onions for the whole year, parsley for flavoring and garnishing, peppers for various purposes, parsnips and salsify for late fall and early spring use, peas sown at intervals so as to make a long season, squashes both summer and winter, spinach for greens, and tomatoes for all sorts of uses. This is quite an array; but there is no reason why nearly all of the sorts may not be grown in every garden on the farm, and what a delightful choice the housewife could have in the planning of the endless number of meals.—Detroit Free Press.

The Borrowing Nuisance.

THE greatest nuisance that the farmer has to contend with, and one which entails on him a not inconsiderable amount of time and labor, is that of the borrowing nuisance. Neighbor A may be a very nice man in many ways; and when the sponge is light stir in three eggs well beaten, one half cupful of molasses and a small lump of butter melted. Let it stand another hour or so, and bake in gem pans, taking care to grease well and heat before dropping in the batter. Bake at least half an hour in a quick oven. As a "set" of gem pans does not bake a sufficient quantity at one time for us, I use any old tea and coffee cups that are "chipped" or with broken handles, and out of use; they turn out in just as pretty a shape, and then only the one baking is necessary.—Jessie Barton in Country Gentleman.

Enormous Wheat Crop.

THE time has commenced. Every year there goes out a great blow about the prospective crop. This is done for a dishonest and selfish purpose of the great wheat marts. It has already commenced for this year's crop. This word is sent out from Chicago, April 12th, by the Associated Press dispatches that "the whole Northwestern spring wheat region shows an acreage of 50 per cent. greater than last year, and that 20 per cent. of last year's crop is still in the farmers' hands. What is the object and motive of this premature and ludicrous statement? It is to injure the sale of what little wheat is on hand, which is now worth 10 per cent., instead of 20. Nor is the area of wheat greatly increased over last year. A few local editors, with the object of glorifying their neighborhoods, and cheering the spirits of their merchants and mechanics with the prospects of the future, have unwisely made extravagant statements of the amount of wheat sown. There is always a disposition to publish excess of larger crops of grain, the sale of large hogs and cattle, but no notice is taken of cases of less crops, or of the sale of poor hogs or scrub cattle. The true colors are prominent, but the dark unnoticed.

And we wish some statistician who blowed so much about the forty millions of a surplus wheat crop in Minnesota last fall to tell, and fifty millions in Dakota etc., would tell us what has become of it. Did it go through Chicago, Milwaukee, or St. Louis to market? What are their reports? By no device can one-half that amount be traced to Iowa or Minnesota, and yet these fabulous stories depressed our wheat in Chicago, in New York and in Liverpool. And there are thousands of mortgages and judgments unpaid that would have been. If a true statement of the amount of wheat in these States had been given to the public.

One man tells he has a thousand bushels of wheat, when he has not half that amount. This is done to perpetuate his credit. A merchant in a town writes out that there are millions of bushels of wheat in the farmers' hands in his county, and as soon as it comes to market he will be able to meet his engagements east. And in this way the merchant is deceived—he deceives others, and the world is deluded, and the farmer suffers all the consequences in the low price of his wheat. The story will be repeated every year, and every year the farmers will be swindled by these lying pretended gatherers of statistics.—Iowa State Register.

Parallels for the Phonograph.

It is quite common to try to assist our comprehension of the marvelous nature of the most splendid feats of scientific invention, by comparing them with something equivalent in the wildest excursions of poetical fancy. In one instance, after submarine telegraphy had been accomplished everybody was told how much it surpassed the boast of Shakespeare's Ariel that he could put a girdle round the earth in forty minutes. It is a curious illustration of the rapidity with which the phonograph is that a resort is had, not to the poets, but to Baron Munchausen, for a parallel. The truth in this case is astonishing, it flies so far beyond the bounds of credibility, as to seem stranger than the bald fictions of that noted raconteur. The Pall Mall Gazette says the phonograph "must have already reminded many persons of those frozen words which Munchausen tells us burn their way into the ear." Every article in the Illustrated and several other pages, of ornate description, but also THE PRICE which you can obtain the goods for. It is printed in clear black letters, and is the only part of the "Quarterly" which is not in fine print. Please all other preparations when in stock. Price 25c. per box. Sold by all Druggists.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A negro in North Carolina fractured his skull by butting a brick wall.

—A Rhode Island sparrow has whipped a rat. The fight was about some crumbs.

—A Savannah, Ga., man pursued his eloping daughter, and found her in a hotel with her new husband. She was of age, and therefore he could not force her to return home; but he was the lawful owner of her clothing, and he compelled her to go to his room and take off every shred of it. Then he went back to Savannah with a large bundle under his arm, and the women in the hotel contributed something for the bride to wear.

—There was a touching scene recently over a fresh grave in Spring Grove Cemetery. A little boy, an only child, was being buried. Among the mourners was a divorced couple, the lady being the sister of the weeping mother there. Her divorced husband had brought crosses and wreaths of flowers to place on the coffin, and also on another grave, that of his own little boy, buried in the same lot two years before. In the confusion of the moment the man handed to his divorced wife the floral tribute to place upon the grave of their lost little one, and their tears mingled over both graves.—Cincinnati Commercial.

—While an express train on the Erie Railway was sweeping down the Valley of the Delaware with unusually great momentum, the engineer saw a little girl walking the track. The locomotive shrieked, but within two seconds she was overtaken and the train passed the spot where she had stood. The engineer looked behind the rear car, expecting to see her mangled body, but the track was clear. He stepped upon the guards of the locomotive and saw the child lying senseless on the cow-catcher. He succeeded in rescuing her as she was about to roll to the ground. She was slightly cut about the face, but escaped without further injury.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Twenty-three years ago Mrs. Ellen Phillips, residing on Factory street, Watertown, lived in Salem. She was then while dancing her baby on her knee, she felt a sharp pain in her left foot, and on examining her slipper found a small hole in it, as though made by a needle. She at once sent for a doctor, who examined her foot and gave his opinion that no needle was in it. Seventeen years passed on, the circumstance was practically forgotten, but six years ago, the point part of a broken needle of less than half the length worked its way through and came from her left leg. This brought to her mind the occurrence of so many years before, and the perforated slipper was the subject of conversation again for a time. It turns out it was a fragment of several similar but not identical substances. Since the time of Dercesne (1804) and Robiquet (1817), who first isolated narcotine and morphine, chemists have very carefully investigated the different chemical compounds occurring in opium. Thus they have discovered codeine, narcine, thebaine, papaverine and other substances, all of them bases, i. e., bodies that combine with acids to form crystallizable salts. These bases do not all affect in the same way the organic functions. Thus narcotine possesses very little or no soporific power; two grammes of it can be injected without perceptible effect; while a centigrammne of morphine is quite sufficient to produce therapeutic and physiological results. Thebaine does not cause sleep, and in animals produces convulsions like those caused by strychnine, while morphine in the same dose produces deep comatose sleep. Another curious thing about these opium alkaloids is that they do not act alike on man and animals, as has been demonstrated by Claude Bernard. Man is especially sensitive to the action of morphine, while thebaine is almost without effect upon his nervous system; animals, on the other hand, feel the effects of morphine only when it is given in large doses, while thebaine is for them a violent poison; so, too, with belladonna and atropine, its active principle; these are a deadly poison for man, but almost without effect on rabbits. The dose of atropine that would suffice to kill ten men would hardly be enough to kill one rabbit. The difference is not so great with respect to morphine, yet morphine speedily affects men.—Popular Sci. Monthly.

LADIES

Ought to know how to dress economically and yet tastefully. No matter what your station in life may be, whether you are the wife or daughter of a millionaire or of a woodcutter, it is your duty to see to it that the money you expend for Dress brings you the best possible quality at the price, and, also, that your garments are cut up in good taste, perfectly shaped and prettily trimmed.

The great centre of Fashion of the United States is, undoubtedly, New York city, and it is an undeniable fact that a lady who makes her purchases in New York, can dress THRICE as becomingly, although she may spend only ONE HALF as much as a lady who lives far away in the country.

It is impossible, of course, that all should make a trip to New York in order to make their purchases, ahem. Dare one, we respectfully call your attention to the next best thing. Send the insignificant sum of 15 CENTS and become a subscriber to the Spring Number of "Ehrichs' Fashion Quarterly."

It differs from every other magazine published. It contains nothing extravagant, nothing that is impossible. It tells you what to wear, how to dress the children, and exactly what the clothing will cost. It is the only Fashion Magazine published that will be as interesting TO YOUR HUSBAND as to yourself.

Returns to your mind a balky volume of one hundred large pages. Every successful article in which a lady can be interested.—Ladies' hats and bonnets; Dressmaking; Embroidery; Knitting; Crochet; Children's hats, from the lowest priced to the most elaborate; Children's dresses; Underclothing, Baby Wear; Fancy Work; Dress Trimmings; Millinery; Needle Work; Jewelry, Shoes, Jewelry, etc., etc. Every article is profusely illustrated, and accompanied by a clear, concise description, but also THE PRICE at which you can obtain the goods here illustrated. It is then become a pocket, reliable guide to be used by the lady in the selection of her Dress.

Interviewed between the Fashions, the "Quarterly" offers the very best original Reading Matter—popular leal essays on "Cooking," by Miss ——, in reference of New York Cooking School; Short stories, Poems, poems, and stories by "Kate Tree" "Daisy Eyebright"—"Leal Lone"—"Madge Elliot"—"Mrs. Pollard, etc., etc. Instructive Department for the Young Folks.

Our worthless Subscription List, exceeding sixty thousand, and our daily receipts of numberless complimentary letters, convince us that our "Quarterly" ought to be in every family in the United States. You may be assured of this—that when you receive the "Quarterly" your only regret will be that you had not been a subscriber years before.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—50 Cents per year (4 numbers); 25 Cents per number; 15 Cents per number, 15 cents.

CHILDREN'S MEETING.—Next Sabbath, June 9th, will be observed as children's day at the M. E. Church in this village. Rev Mr. Jewel, of Louis, S. S. Missionary, will be present.

REGULAR Communication of Charlevoix Lodge No. 282, F. & A. M. on Tuesday evening, June 12. A general attendance of the Fraternity is desired.

THE BRIDGE.—The pier and turntable of the new bridge is completed, and the workmen are now engaged in putting up the bridge part. Everything so far fully meets the expectations of all. It will be a structure both durable and ornamental.

We note with pleasure that very many of the State papers are mentioning the name of Hon. W. I. Latimer, of Big Rapids, in connection with the office of Auditor General. We know just enough, personally, of Mr. Latimer, to know that a better man cannot be found in Michigan, and we endorse him unqualifiedly.

The people of Springvale and neighboring Townships are preparing to celebrate Fourth of July.

THE Baptist Committee are expected here to-morrow, when a formal transfer of the land into their hands will take place.

CAPT. WILSON, of the tug Tillson, received a telegram from Sheboygan, Wis., informing him of the expected death of his wife. He left for that place Sunday.

FARMER'S CLUB.—A Farmer's Club was organized in the Township of Hayes one day last week, with the following officers: President, C. H. Whitford; Vice President, Mrs. Geo. Scott; Secretary, Lorin Hamlin; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Maudaville; Treasurer, I. S. Webster.

RICHARD KNIGHT, Esq., of Banks, has been visiting in Wisconsin, and last week returned home. Mr. Knight is a farmer of large and varied experience, and one of the pioneers of Antrim County. He comes home fully convinced that this part of Michigan is greatly superior to any part of Wisconsin that he has seen (the best part of Wisconsin) and the visit across the lake has made him better satisfied than ever with Grand Traverse.

DIED.—"Old Father Cater" died in Eveline on Friday night last. He was 80 years of age, and had been an active member of the M. E. Church for 64 years. He leaves a wife, with whom he has lived happily for the same number of years. This good old Christian gentleman was beloved and honored by a large circle of friends, and is gathered home as a sheaf fully ripened and fit for the harvest. His funeral sermon was preached by Rev. B. H. Whitman, of this place.

From Boyne Falls via Boyne to Charlevoix.

From Petoskey to Gaylord.

THE River and Harbor bill still hangs fire in the Senate, but Washington advices state that Charlevoix will be all right.

PERSONAL.—Dr. J. H. Morgan and wife, of Grand Rapids, have taken summer quarters in a portion of J. Ingalls' residence. Dr. Morgan came principally for health, but will do all kinds of work in Dentistry very reasonably.

—A. M. Morgan, son of Henry Morgan, Esq., of this place, who has been spending a few months in Canada, has returned home.

—A. J. Beardsley, of Boyne, went to Port Huron Thursday on the propeller Fountain City.

—A Texas brother of J. A. Cameron is spending a few days in town.

Don't take our word for it, or believe it, because the paper says so and so, but call at our store and be convinced that we have the best stock of dry goods, clothing, hats, caps, boots, shoes and every thing else to numerous to mention and at the most reasonable prices.

FOX, ROSE & BUTTARS.

Queen Victoria was fifty-nine years of age last Friday, and her birth day was celebrated in pompous style by all loyal Englishmen. At Montreal, Canada, the event was signalized by a successful military parade and sham fight, which drew together 30,000 spectators.

MARINE.—Through a misunderstanding of the bells, the propeller Gazelle got aground just above the bridge Saturday, and had to be released by the tug Commodore.

—The propeller Gazelle is 70 feet long, last a l of 64, as stated in our description of her last week.

—The tug Tillson broke her stern post and was compelled to go to Manistee to repair last week.

—There were 41 clearances from the port of Charlevoix during the month of May, with a tonnage of 5043 tons. There have been 84 clearances since the opening of navigation.

—The schooner W. A. Smith is being repainted and otherwise re-fitted, after which she will take a cargo of potatoes to Bay City.

—Cleared during the week: sloops I. A. Johnson, Belle, Bloom, Alaska, schooner Wescott. Now in port: Lon Higby, W. A. Smith, Wescott, Radical, Hercules, Minnie Mueller.

—The schooner Wescott made her last round trip between this place and Kenosha in four days and sixteen hours. Captain Reed is justified in bragging about that time.

Carpenter & Bartholomew have an assortment of fine French candles that are the best we have seen.

THE new residence of Hon John Nicholls is rapidly approaching completion. The painter has commenced his part of the work, and the plasterer will commence his this week. The view from the bay window of this fine residence is of surpassing beauty, overlooking as it does the village the harbor, and the lake beyond.

Dexter & Noble, recently sold to Dempsey & Carter, of Manistee, a tract of pine in towns 24 6 and 25 8, for which they received $45,000.

The Cincinnati Enquirer, a straight-out Democratic organ, is opposed to reopening the presidential contest through the Potter one-sided investigation or otherwise. It says that "to reverse the decision of the electoral commission would not only go behind the returns, but behind the law of the land; and therefore the only object at this resolution must be to make political capital, and for that purpose the policy is a mistaken one."

Men's ambitions grow from year to year. A while ago, Tilden was satisfied to wreck a railroad now he wants to wreck the whole country.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 14th, the House amendments to the bill authorizing citizens of Colorado, Nevada and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes were concurred in, and the bill was passed. Several bills were reported from committees and placed on the calendar. The Deficiency Appropriation bill was further considered and passed. Messrs. Coke and Harris spoke in favor of the bill to repeal the Resumption act. The deed-lock continued in the House on the investigation resolution of Mr. Potter, the Speaker announcing the regular order to be on awarding the demand for the previous question. The Republicans refrained from voting, thus leaving the House without a quorum, as there were but 113 Democrats present; 149 being necessary to make a quorum. After further filibustering on the part of the Republicans, a motion to adjourn was carried—138 to 108.

In the Senate, on the 15th, the petition of Robt. G. Ingersoll and others, favoring the repeal of the law prohibiting the transportation of obscene literature through the mails, was referred from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and referred to the Judiciary Committee. The bill authorizing the Secretary of War, for the construction of the narrow gauge Toledo, Logansport and Burlington railroad, was passed. It was ordered and referred—to authorize the Postmaster-General to place mail service on any public highway, river or railroad wherever police service requires it, increasing to seventy-five dollars a month the pension of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who have lost both arms, or both feet, or the sight of both eyes, in the service of the country. In the House, the Senate resolution for the final adjournment of Congress on the 19th of June came up as a question of the highest privilege, and a motion was agreed to—181 to 89—to postpone its further consideration until the 26th of May. The deed-lock on the Potter resolution continued, the highest number of votes cast by the Democrats on the question to second the previous question being 149, the Republicans still refusing to vote. A call showed 293 members present, but efforts to get a quorum to vote were ineffectual, and the House finally adjourned.

A CONCURRENT resolution was submitted by Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, and referred, in the Senate, on the 16th, providing for a Commission, to consist of two Senators, three members of the House and three officers of the regular army who have served not less than ten years, to whom shall be referred the whole subject of the reform and reorganization of the Army, the Commission to assemble as soon as practicable, and to report to the next session of Congress through the President of the United States. The House joint resolution to print 30,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1877 and 5,000 copies of the Colonial Charters and Constitutions was passed. The bill to repeal the Resumption act was further considered, and Mr. Matthews submitted an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, providing for the reissue of Treasury notes, when redeemed, the aggregate of legal tenders outstanding at any time not to exceed $346,000,000, and further providing for a sufficiency fund of $10,000,000, and that bonds of the United States shall be sold for legal-tender notes, and that legal-tender notes shall be receivable for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt. The deed-lock continued in the House, two or three votes being lost without indicating a quorum, the call showed 302 members present, but the Republicans still refrained from voting on the motion to second the previous question on the investigating resolution. The last vote showed 142 Democrats present, or within 10 of a quorum. A motion to adjourn was agreed to by a vote of 141 to 116.

SEVERAL Pension bills were passed in the Senate, on the 17th. A number of bills were reported from committees and placed on the calendar. A resolution was adopted, instructing the Committee on Rules to consider the propriety of admitting the heads of bureaus of Executive Departments of the Government on the floor of the Senate during the sessions thereof. Adjourned to the 20th. The Senate amendments to the Indian Appropriation bill were concurred in by the House. After a protracted struggle and the issuing of a warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest absent and sitting members as were absent without leave, the Democrats succeeded in securing a quorum of their own number, and the pressure question on the Potter resolution was ordered. At 1 A. M. a motion to lay the resolution on the table was then defeated—70 to 189—and the preamble and resolution were finally adopted—142 to 2—the Republicans refusing to vote. Messrs. Mills and Moore (Democrats) voted in the negative, during the progress of the previous question motion. Mr. Goode explained why he voted after a previous vote with Mr. Lofland, and Mr. Conger made the remark that it was simply a question of how severely Mr. Hiscock would break his pair. Mr. Goode replied that he could take care of his own honor, and if Mr. Conger exalted it he should be held personally responsible. Remarks being made that the remarks of the gentlemen be taken down, the Speaker decided that the words of Mr. Goode were not parliamentary if they were used in an offensive sense, and that a man in honor could not be called a quotation without allowing him to defend it.

SENATE not in session on the 18th.

In the House, Mr. Stephens asked to be put on record, stating that had he been present when the vote was taken on what is known as the Potter resolution, on the 17th, and had he not been paired with Mr. Harris, he would have voted against the resolution as it stood. A discussion was reported from the Committee on Elections declaring that there had been no fair, free and peaceable election in the First Congressional District of South Carolina, and that neither Hamilton (the sitting member) nor Richardson (contestant) was entitled to the seat. Conference Committees were appointed on the Indian and Pension Appropriation bills, and a new committee was also ordered and named on the Military Academy bill. The Army Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole. The Speaker stated that he would be absent during the next part of the ensuing week, and a motion was adopted appointing Mr. Baxter Speaker pro tem. It was arranged that there should be evening sessions for business purposes during all of the following week.

BILLS were introduced in the Senate, on the 20th, to reorganize the Court of Claims, and to extend its jurisdiction to take all claims from before Congress and the Departments for adjudication; to regulate immigration. A bill was passed to amend the 1st Article of War, so as to provide that no person shall be tried or punished by court-martial for any offense not committed more than two years, or in case of desertion three years, before the arraignment of such person for such offense. Mr. Morrill, Chairman of the Finance Committee, reported in addition to the bill to repeal the Resumption act, the bill to place the name of Gen. Sheridan on the retired list of the army, with the rank of Brigadier-General, was taken up and on motion was confirmed by 37 to 29, and adopted—30 to 28—to place the name of Hon. Granton the retired list, with full rank and pay. Conference Committees were appointed on the Indian and Pension Appropriation bills. Bills were introduced in the House—regulating the law relating to a tax of 1 per cent. on State banks; to protect internal and domestic commerce by taking the tenth and subsequent censuses; requiring the appointments in the Civil Service to be distributed equally among the Congressional Districts. Speaker pro tem. announced the appointment of the committee under the Potter resolution to investigate into the alleged frauds in the late Presidential election as follows: Potter, Morrison, Hewitt, Springer, McMahon, Cobb (Indiana), Lowe, Cox (Ohio), Butler, Reed (Me.) and Hiscock.

DOMESTIC.

A FEW mornings ago, Annie Farrell, a servant girl of Chicago, was burned to death in an explosion of a quantity of kerosene, which she was using to kindle the kitchen fire.

THE anniversary meeting of the National Temperance Society opened in Chicago on the 14th. Vice-President E. S. Wells presided. The address of welcome was delivered by Rev. Dr. W. W. Everts, of Chicago. In his address the Corresponding Secretary stated that the liquor problem was becoming more and more a recognized paramount question of practical politics. The Treasurer's report shows receipts for the year from publications, $46,888.63; donations, $7,182.13, making a total of $54,080.75. Expenses for the same period, $54,020.33.

THE Pennsylvania Supreme Court has lately decided that, when an insured person is in such a state of mental incapacity as to be unconscious of the consequences of his acts, suicide by him falls without the provision in his policy in regard to self-slaughter, and does not absolve the insurers from liability.

THE General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church met in Pittsburgh, on the 16th. In consequence of the illness of Dr. Ellis, of Oakland, Cal., Dr. Morris, of Harrisonal, acted as Moderator, and preached the opening sermon. Rev. Dr. Francis L. Patton, of Chicago, was elected Moderator for the ensuing year.

THE General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of North America met in New York City, on the 16th. Rev. A. G. Wylie was elected Moderator, to serve during 1878-9.

THE General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church met at Lebanon, Tenn., on the 16th. Rev. W. D. Bushnell, of California, was elected Moderator for the ensuing year.

THE General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church South met in Knoxville, Tenn., on the 16th. Rev. Thos. E. Peek, D. D., of Virginia, was elected Moderator for 1878.

THE New York Senate, which recently contracted with the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of $50,000,000 of paper-cent. bonds on Jan. 1, 1879, have anticipated their options and subscribed for the entire amount. It was reported in New York, on the 17th, that the parties composing the Syndicate had offered to take $50,000,000 of the 4-per-cents., with the option of $50,000,000 additional.

JEFF DAVIS, a negro murderer, who was to have been hung at Abbeville, S. C., on the 17th, was respited at the last moment by Gov. Hampton till June 14. The respite was read to the condemned man upon the scaffold, after the hood had been adjusted and prayers finished, and just as he was about to be swung off.

AT Cincinnati, on the 18th, the American Social Science Association met in further consultation, and Mr. Matthews submitted an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, providing for the reissue of Treasury notes, when redeemed, the aggregate of legal tenders outstanding at any time not to exceed $346,000,000, and further providing for a sufficiency fund of $10,000,000, and that bonds of the United States shall be sold for legal-tender notes, and that legal-tender notes shall be receivable for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt. OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, May 31, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

The Chinaman still remains one of the subordinate questions with which society has to deal here in New York, and he is with us, as with every one else, a puzzler. Despite his taciturnity and his child-like blandness he is always getting, innocently or otherwise, into any amount of trouble. For instance, here are three full blooded celestials who, according to the traditions of their race, engineer a wash house over on the East side. They had some pecuniary standing with a customer about a week ago, owing to delay in finishing up the latter's work. The customer, by way of making his dissatisfaction known, overturned everything movable in the place, and wound up his explanation by breaking a burning lamp over the head of the pig tailed boss. Then when one of the dazed washermen had got enough of his breath and his senses to start after a policeman the irate patron would not permit him but, dodging out of the door, locked it on the outside and left the luckless Confucians caged with a fire which the oil from the broken lamp had started, while he himself went off for reinforcements. Returning shortly after with several boon companions the lassiate customer aided his followers to break all the windows of the place and bombard the idolatrous amateur firemen who were still struggling with the flames, with aged eggs, deceased cats, ragged brickbats and other assorted missiles. At this juncture there happened an occurrence about as rare as total eclipses of the sun. A policeman actually came along and arrested all concerned. Arrived at the station house the official inquired of the Chinaman if they wished to make a charge against their adversary. No answer being rendered, the question was repeated till it was evident that none of the three spoke English enough to say what was necessary.

The riotous customer took in the situation at a glance. He stepped coolly up and preferred a charge of a assault and battery against his will high mattyred victims, alleging that while he was in their shop they had sought to slay him with a flat iron. The charge was duly entered, and the unfortunate washermen after having suffered thus grievously in mind, body and estate, were remanded for trial and led speechless away, while their assailant walked off with his friends, the picture of injured innocence. At last accounts the poor heathen were still trying to figure out the situation and to get the hang of the Melican man's law.

It is hardly probable that our venerable philanthropist, Peter Cooper, will want to run for president again. Not only did he find his following rather scanty in 1876, but now he is being dragged over the coals in a law suit for libel, brought by Wallace P. Groom wants $50,000, which is the amount, in his opinion, to which his feelings and character were damaged by Mr. Cooper's accusation that he had misappropriated certain of the funds belonging to the Greenback party. The suit will probably amount to nothing beyond showing what a queer set of politicians the worthy old gentleman fell among and how they handled him.

And now through the stir and bustle of the new World's fair comes a trady echo from the Centennial. For two years the publication of the Official Report on "Group 27" has been enlarged, thus rendering possible the controversy which has raged between the two most prominent manufacturers of pianos, which instruments, as may be remembered, formed the most important class in this group. Finally, however, the long considered document has made its appearance and by it the contest is made as much a thing of the past as the war of the Roses.

The judges, after their long sitting, are unanimous and emphatic in their verdict not only that the Steinway piano was first and last in all respects, but that there was a wide distance between it and its next lower competitor. The inevitable conclusion upon reading these reports in that there have been considerable misstatements—to use no plainer language—by certain rivals of Steinways, since the Fall of 1876.

A couple of weeks ago I mentioned the ill odors that had gained fashionable New York in a general uprising against the nuisance. The good work still goes bravely on. One of the stench producers has just been tried before a jury, convicted and sentenced, and seven others are now waiting their turn at the mill of justice. More than this, the Grand Jury have been instructed to find a true bill against our kid gloved Board of Health, who up to quite recently have treated public opinion with the most contemptuous indifference. There is hope on the whole, that before the present crusade spends itself, the city will be in a good measure purified from an atmospheric contamination which is not only intensely disagreeable, but which has for years had no unimportant share in making up our death rate.

All through the eight years that have passed since the Harvard crew first race on the Thames, we have felt a trifle sore over the crushing defeat of the American oarsmen. To be sure some crumbs of comfort were obtainable from the result of the little contest on the Schuylkill in Centennial times, but that was not enough to heal our wounded pride on the 23d hour of our Columbia College boys sailed on the City of Chester to try once more what can be done in recapturing our lost laurels. Whether they will succeed in accomplishing this object or only in losing a few more will all come out in due time.

Since our addition of the Manhattan Market was opened in 1882—it was sold under foreclosure for $150,000—the number of stalls occupied has steadily diminished, until now there are only about half a dozen. It covers about four acres, and looks like a mammoth birdcage, the sparrows having taken possession of it for the last two or three years and built their nests and hatched their young in the trusses which support the arched roof over head. The birds are a great nuisance to the market men. Three ineffectual attempts have been made to drive them out of the building, but they are now more numerous than ever. The birds, in fact, have the best of it, and will probably outstay the stall keepers. If a city is established between Thirty-fourth street and Jersey City the market may revive. Otherwise it can be made to pay a good return on $150,000 as a warehouse for foreign steerers.

RADIX.

Grant Will Settle It.

From the Chicago Tribune.

The prosecution of the Democratic conspiracy, under the name of an "investigation," to the real end of crowding Hayes out of office, will sound an alarm that will reverberate from one end of this country to the other. The popular cry will be "let us have peace," and the assurance of peace will be found in U. S. Grant—the man who conquered it once before, and who has the nerve and skill to conquer it again. Gen Grant has his personal and partisan enemies, but all unite upon him as the first soldier of the day, and the most resolute man in America. There is a universal sentiment at the North and at the South, that, in a long struggle or a short struggle, Gen Grant will stamp out revolution, anarchy, Communism, and every form that treason and passion may take on to destroy the Government. He is the man of our time and country to whom the law and order people will appeal with one accord, without regard to former dissention or an estimate of his capacity in other political affairs, whenever it shall be necessary to apply forces to the suppression of revolution,—in the certainty that in every case the destruction of the treasonable violence will be certain and complete.

Grant's nomination and election are undoubtedly in the hands of the Democrats, for the same conditions that would prompt the one would surely lead to the other. Grant was first elected by the Republicans, to put down "Andyjohnsonism." He was elected the second time by Democrats. Some 300,000 or 400,000 Republicans probably voted for Greely in 1872, but fully half a million Democrats voted for Grant, and as many more Democrats remained away from the polls to make his election sure. There was no mixture of revolution then, but the conservative dread of a disturbance of trade under such a weak or erratic administration as Greeley's was likely to be was enough to turn the tide in Grant's favor. How much more certain, then, is it the conservative classes will again rally around Grant when there is a threat of Mexicanization of the republic, when not merely the welfare, but the peace of the country is threatened, and when greater disaster than the war of the rebellion can only be averted by reposing popular confidence and full power in the man who of all living Americans, is best fitted to overcome and punish treason and revolution!

A Boy's Description of the Bee.

One day Billy, wich had been a round-in that poetry about the bee, and the ant, and sech things, kep a sayin it over till we ol got sick of hearin it, so one time wen he come in the room and lined out with my father he said, William, that laseek lins past a totably quiet nite, and is a doin as well as cude be expekted, it is very good of your master to send you to inquire so often, but it is a nusance ol the same, so I amalsent to lushen this bulletin, wich will save you any furs ther trubble. Wen he said that my father pict up a paper wats and made like he was a goin to fling it, but Billy he improved the shinin our by dashing thru the dore into the passidge.

I hate bees cos some fokes wich writes is ol ways a crackin' 'em up, like they was the mose industrius, and orfly, and pensible, and clever things in ol this worl, and little boys and girls ot to be like 'em. But wat if little boys and girls wuke like they does?

The hunny wich is take out of bee hives is sweet, but frute cake is the staf for me. Bees way, wich my mother sies wen she sese the baby's frox, is nothing but just hunny comb, but not like you comb your head with.

The way the bees makes wax is this way. A bee goes to a flour and roles in it, and the dust sticks to his legs and makes him feel uncomfitable, and wen he cant stan it no longer he goes back to the hive, and wen he gits in there the hol porter bee says boos! Then the boss bee comes and brushes the dust off the bee wich robel in the drores legs, but dont sweep it up, and so many a goin in and out it gits trampled into mud wich is wax. But how they bores the six corner holes in it, bes they do it with a six corner oggur, and were they git the hunny to put 'em, as wet beats me.

Maybe you have been about a bee line. Wen a bee gits his legs lobed, like I tole you, and wants a brush up, it flise roun and roun, gitting high upper and high upper, ol the time, till it sees wich way the hive is, and then it has wasted so much time it has got to fli mity strate to git home fore dark, and that is a bee line. If it didn't think itself so oncefurl clever it wude start of to random and inquire the way and git home lots quicker and not so far to go, but bees is bees. Only I don't like 'em to be throde up to me as if they knoble it ol, and me and Billy was a fool.

Lass summer our dog Towser was a lyin in the sun a trime to sleep, but the flies was bad but he cuddent, you no he had to ketch 'em, but bimeby a bee lit on his head, and was a wukking a leun the fat dog ate his nose. Towser lelped his head sti, and wen the bee was close to his nose Towser winked at me, as he said you see wut this duffer is a doin, he thinks I'm a bit of the hony wich issent opn yet, but you jus wait till I blossom and you will see some good fits, and sure emf Towser opened his mouth very slow so as not to friten the bee, and sure emf the bee went inside Towser's mouth. Then Towser he shet his eyes dreamy, and his mouth too, and had begun to make a peacenble sunle wen the bee stung him, and you never see a lilly of the valley ack so in of your life.—Little Johnny, in N. Y. Weekly.

Great Promise of the Growing Crops.

With scarcely an exception, the staples upon which most reliance is placed—wheat, corn, cotton and grass —are in at last as promising a condition as they have been at any corresponding period (the second week in May) during the past quarter of a century. There have been heavy rains recently in various parts of the West and also in New England, yet but little serious damage has occurred. The Prairie Farmer of the 4th inst., after referring to the damage caused by the recent storms in some localities, speaks most hopefully of the prospects in Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Missouri, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska and other States it enumerates. In the latitude of St. Louis, it says, the wheat is already heading out, and in a very short time now the sickles of the reapers will be running in thousands of fields South, and adds: "The outlook on the whole was never better in the South, Southwest and Northwest." Our contemporary says that in several States "much of the corn is up and ready for cultivation;" that it is receiving from all sections this cheering intelligence: "It is never better, outlook all that could be desired;" and concludes by saying: "We may reiterate what we have beforestated, that never in the history of the West have we had so advanced a season of uniformly mild weather or so early a season for planting. This one 'decorr' has shown from week to week. The weather is now generally favorable for farm work. Let us hope it may continue, and at the close of the season's labors all may unite in one grand harvest-home such as the West has never yet seen."

Our recent advices from the South, both written and printed, are generally favorable. Georgia and Texas report more promising crops than ever before, while the Virginias (old and West) and the Carolinas are making notable progress in the line of increased agricultural production. Georgia, Alabama and several other cotton-growing States have wisely increased their acreage of corn, wheat, etc. The planters are giving more attention to mixed husbandry, instead of depending mainly upon cotton, and the result will be an increase of prosperity and independence. Arkansas and the Indian Territory promise unusually large yields of wheat, cotton and tobacco, with increased attention to other crops.

Turning from the South to the great agricultural States of the North, notably New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, and we find the great staples in a most promising condition, with a larger acreage than for many years. The wheat crop never looked better at this season, and as the acreage is far greater than ever before the yield must be immense, unless the grain is seriously attacked by the Hessian fly or suffers from rust or some other calamity. Our accounts from Central and Western New York are especially favorable in regard to wheat and other staples, and the farmers are hopeful of an abundant yield of the leading products. Both Ohio and Pennsylvania will, according to present indications, produce a greater abundance of cereals than ever before, while other crops, including fruit, are most promising. New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland will probably yield a greater amount of fruit than has been expected; and in sections where the crop has been diminished in quantity the quality will be improved. The reports in regard to the prospects of other staples in these States are generally encouraging.

From New England—a region so generally regarded by people of more favored localities as bleak, sterile and too rocky and hilly for profitable cultivation—we have favorable accounts of the season and crops. Advices as late as the 6th instant say the recent heavy rain, which continued eight days, caused no serious damage. A Boston agricultural journal of the 4th says: "The season is at least two weeks earlier than usual, and the grass and vegetation generally is that much in advance of the average of years. So far the promise of the year is uncommonly good. Our letters from Vermont, New Hampshire and other parts of New England all report the season forward, and the farmers preparing to plant more largely of corn and other crops than for many years. The hay crop will be large, and more wheat, rye and tobacco will be grown than in any previous season for years. An abundant yield of apples is expected, and other fruits promise well.

From other parts of the continent—as Dakota, Colorado and California in the West, and Canada on the North—we also have favorable reports as to the season and prospects of growing crops. Colorado and Dakota are cultivating much greater areas than ever before, the increase being principally in wheat and corn, of which there will be a large aggregate production. The reports from California and Oregon are very favorable in regard to the condition and prospects of the staple crops of the Pacific region, and especially wheat, of which there is promise of an immense surplus for export. From Canada also, particularly the Province of Ontario, the accounts of the wheat crop are unusually promising for more than an average yield, and as the acreage is greater than ever before, the aggregate production must be largely augmented.

In conclusion, if America was before justly called the granary of the world, it promises to be more fully entitled to the claim and name after the coming harvest, for nothing unforeseen occurs meantime its productions of cereals will far exceed any ever known in its history. And if the threatened European war occurs, American will be prepared to supply the "staff of life" to the millions who will thereby become consumers instead of producers of the most important of all our staples. True, the wheat crop is not beyond danger of serious injury from various causes—notably rust and the Hessian fly, both which have attacked it in some localities—yet the probability is that, with such an immense area devoted to the great cereal, the aggregate yield will be unprecedented in the history of a country remarkable for its agricultural profusion. But if one crop fails, or is diminished materially from any cause, others are likely to yield abundantly, so that our people will not want for the necessaries of life, while the present indications are that there will be a large surplus of all the leading staples for exportation.—N. Y. World.

Poisoned Spears.

In an interesting series of letters to the London Field from the New Zealand rider, a group of islands north of Australia belonging to the Paraguan group, whose inhabitants are extremely savage and think nothing of making a meal of a missionary, Mr. L. Layard describes the dreaded poisoned spears of these islanders, made with long carved points of human bones. These points are formed from the leg bones of either friends or enemies, a thigh bone being split into four points, while a shin bone suffices for only two. The natives are very particular about the selection of them. They say that the bone of a person under twenty is too weak and spongy; from twenty to forty they are at their best. After that age they become too brittle. Some spears have as many as 200 or 250 points and splinters fastened on them —three or four vastly exceeding the others in size, being in fact the main structures of the barbs, of course, impregnated with the virus of the body that has decayed around it. They are used for arrows also, and barbed for the purpose of being fixed in the wound long enough for the poison to mingle with the blood.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Hoe cabbage plants when the dew is on, but beans when they are dry.

—Some dooryards look as though struck by a Western tornado which had proved too much for it.

—Bees require no outlay for wintering in shape of food. They cost only care. They often make very profitable returns. More attention should be given to the production of honey.

—A good start is the main thing on the farm in the spring. The ground well plowed and thoroughly harrowed; good seed, planted in time, and then followed closely with the harrow, and there is a good start.—Iowa State Register.

—Some varieties of flowers, the jacksonia for instance, thrive best if the roots draw what water they need from the sancer, instead of being forced to take what is poured on from above, and to be sprinkled should be laid down on the side.—Detroit Free Press.

—Horse Radish.—A little horse-radish taken with meat is a stimulant to digestion and by no means unwholesome. It is also excellent in small quantities for cattle, cut up fine and mixed with potatoes or a little bran meal. It will create an appetite and will keep off disease in animals.

—The Egg Pudding.—One quart sweet milk, five eggs, five tablespoonfuls flour (slightly rounded), butter size of a small walnut; take a few moments in a moderate oven, stirring a little at first to prevent the flour settling to the bottom; should be very light and delicate when done; to be eaten with sugar and cream; flavored as you like.

—Very good cheese is made of potatoes in Saxony. The potatoes are boiled, reduced to pulp, salted and mixed with sour milk, then all is kneaded together and left for a few days. After this the substance is again kneaded and pressed into little baskets to dry. This cheese will keep and is not likely to become inhabited.—Prairie Farmer.

—Milwaukee Pudding.—One cup molasses, three-fourths cup suet, or butter size of an egg, one cup sweet milk, three cups flour, one even teaspoon soda, one cup raisins, one heaping teaspoon cinnamon, two eggs, one heaping teaspoon cloves; steam two hours; can be made some time before needed, and then put into a steamer and steamed when required for use.

—Fried Potatoes with Eggs.—Slice cold boiled potatoes and fry in good butter until brown; beat up one or two eggs and stir into them just as you dish them for table. Do not leave them a moment on the fire after the eggs are in, as if they harden they are not half so nice. Fry egg in enough for three or four persons, unless they are particularly fond of potatoes; if they are, have plenty and put in two.—Rural Home.

—Too little stress is paid to the egg plant. When once a taste for it is acquired, it has a delicate flavor, and soon becomes a favorite dish. It should be cultivated in every man's garden. So soon as the fruit is as large as a man's fist, it is ready for use. Slice it half an inch thick, parboil, and then fry in butter. To grow the egg plant well soil cannot be too rich nor too warm. The plants should stand 18 inches apart, and carefully taken up so they can be transplanted without disturbing the roots too much, as they are very diffident to transplant successfully. They are easier killed by the frost or cold than the tomato plants. Water them when the weather is dry, and after the water has settled cover with dry dirt, so the surface will not bake. They should not be transplanted except there is a certainty of continuous warm weather. The fruit is healthy and delicious when served up right.—Iowa State Register.

Why Cows Hold Up Their Milk.

The bag or udder is divided into four parts, entirely distinct from each other, except as they are held together by membranaceous ligaments. The milk in each is held in confluent tubes, which, like the leaves of a tree, are all connected into one just above the teat, the milk entering that tubule-shaped organ by a single channel. Just at the upper end of the teat the walls of this channel are contracted and the contraction is surrounded by a band of muscular fibers. The will of the cow can operate on this band, contracting or expanding it at pleasure, making it operate like a valve. At the junction of each milk tube with a larger one is a similar contraction and band, also under the control of the will. Ordinarily these bands are contracted (as in the case of the bladder) so that the milk has to crowd its way through them to get from the smaller into the larger tubes. This is an admirable arrangement for sustaining the weight of the milk equally in all parts of the udder and preventing it from pressing heavily upon the teats. When the udder is full, if the milk is drawn out of the teats, relieving the pressure in them it requires a vigorous effort of the will of the cow to prevent the pressure above from crowding the milk down to fill the vacancy. If the udder is only partly filled she can hold the milk back more easily, and the less there is in it the more easily can she maintain the tension of the muscular bands necessary to prevent entire "letting down" of the milk through them. When the milker first takes hold of the teats and begins to milk the excitement causes the cow to contract the bands so firmly as to hold back the milk perfectly for a time. But presently this vigorous contraction will begin to slacken and the milk will pour through, and if all is quiet she will relax the bands fully, when the milk settles down upon the teats, and if quickly drawn it can all be milked out to the very last drop. But this perfect relaxation will only last for a short time. If the milk is not soon extracted she will begin to tighten up the muscular bands again, and the last part will be held back and permanently retained when the milker probably thinks he has got it all, because it stops coming. A cow should, therefore, be milked quickly as well as quietly. A calf will draw milk in three minutes, and a milker should come as near that time as possible. If the time of milking is much prolonged she will become impatient, and be sure not to "give down" perfectly. The quietest and quickest milker gets the most and best milk, because he gets all the "strippings," which are the richest part.—N. Y. Herald.

Hilling Potatoes.

MUCH has been published within a few years on the subject of hilling potatoes, and by some the flat-culture system has been highly recommended. At one time the arguments brought out in its favor were so clear that I experimented on the system, and the result was a very lean harvest of small potatoes. I have no doubt, however, of the sincerity of those who recommend that mode of culture, which probably has been successful under the circumstances by which they were favored. But in farming, as in medicine, there are no hard and positive rules of practice. In medicine, the constitution, habits and all other peculiarities are to be understood in order to apply safe and efficient remedies. So in farming, the nature and quality of soil, and other conditions, must be understood in order to insure successful practice. When the potato rot first appeared in this country, thirty-five years ago, it was soon discovered that the ones were first attacked on low grounds, subject to fogs, and that the disease was worse on still, clammy soils, curtched by fermenting manures. This induced farmers to plant on lands high and dry (if the soil was savory sandy, so much the better), and to use manures cooling in their nature. The result was a saving of the crop under such management; while where the older system of planting lower fields of more compact soil, and feeding with heating manures was continued, a failure from rot was the general consequence.

Here was a happy variation of results brought about by a variation of culture, and we have no reason to suppose but that the flat-culture system, under some circumstances, may be successful. Admitting this to be so, we have in this section of country no such Irrigatable soil as the field on which to try this mode of culture; while on a tenacious, clayey soil, many one, that resquires much working, and requires a friable condition, I should continue the old system of plowing out, pulverizing the soil, and hilling up, for the following reason: Where such soils are flat-cultured, they will become compact by the rains and by the numerous tramps of the feet on the surface in gardens, so that they become impermeable to the influence of rain and air—two valuable elements of growth—consequently the size of the potato is diminished, and its quality impaired, by its being deprived of its due proportion of moisture.

Ireland, with soil moistened by the saline breezes of the sea, is famous for potato growing; and how stalwart sons who rouse to America are naturally successful in its culture here, and often raise fine crops of potatoes under most unfavorable circumstances. What in my practice may be in other localities, I am not informed: but here, where they form a numerous class, their uniform practice is to hill largely, or if they plant in drills, to bring the earth into ridges during the growing crop, and their crops are large.

Just when to form the hill is an important consideration in securing a crop, and is better done after a rain than when the ground is very dry, for by hoeing in moisture, a supply is secured to counteract the effect of dry weather. Cor. Country Gentleman.

Tillage for Corn.

We think the question of deep or shallow plowing is pretty definitely settled, so far as the ordinary prairie soils are concerned, in favor of shallow plowing. That is: six inches may be taken as the maximum depth at which to plow for the best results in raising corn. The best time, however, for plowing is one wherein many farmers make a mistake. Very often the ground is plowed too wet. When this is the case, no amount of surface labor will bring the crop to a good condition. In nine cases out of ten when the land is fall plowed, and the surface thoroughly stirred in the spring, when dry, and planted without replowing, a better crop of corn will be realized than if the crop be planted on fresh plowed land, if the plowing be done while the land is wet. This is especially true if trash or manure has been plowed under in the fall.

It is a mistake to suppose that a soil should be very soft to reach the best results in tillage; on the other hand it should be moderately compact, for at the same time it be in a pulverable state. Thus all that is necessary is to work the surface into a good state of tilth, and there is little danger but a good crop of corn will result if only the plowing of the crop be conscientiously accomplished.

When, however, corn is planted on fall plowing, we have found it an excellent plan at the first cultivation to use narrow bull-tongue shares on the cultivator, next the corn, setting them so they will move the earth to the full depth of the plowing. These throw no earth laterally, but open the soil so the young roots of corn have mellow earth to work in. It also tends to aerate the soil, thus living the gases that are always being decomposed in a soil open to the air. When the corn is thus plowed both ways, these narrow teeth may be moved to the outside of the cultivator and the broader ones used next the corn. Thus the whole soil is kept mellow to the full depth of the plowing.

The object of cultivation is, first, to destroy weeds, second, to keep the surface of the soil mellow. If this mellow surface, or, rather, a surface of finely-pulverized soil, be maintained through the growing season, the roots are kept in a state of constant activity, the leaves are of a deep green, and the crop is kept growing right along. If, on the other hand, the surface becomes crusted or sodden from being watersoaked, the plants cease growing and soon show by the altered color of the leaves that something is wrong. This shows conclusively that it is the action of the air in the pores of the soil that vouchsafes, as our principal means, to continued health in the crop.

Let the ground be entirely and closely shaded, as with a crop of grass and grain, this crusting of the soil does not take place, and there is a more sodden, and hence, again, the absolute necessity of stirring the soil in all seasons that are wet. But in a season of such growth as enables them to pretty well shade the ground.—Prairie Farmer.

An Elephant Fight in Virginia.

A rather exciting scene occurred while the circus was traveling en route to Louisa Court-House. The belligerents, Chief, Princess, Mary and Bismarck, were the actors and actresses in the "little difficulty." It had been apparent to Mr. Ring (their keeper) and several other attaches of the show that trouble was brewing, the two females, Mary and Chief (Asiatic) on one side, and Bismarck and Princess (African) on the other. The denouement occurred while crossing the South Anna River, on a bridge; the elephants crossing in the following order: Princess first, Mary second, Bismarck third and Chief bringing up in the rear of the squad, the elephants not being allowed to come on the bridge at the same time on account of its apparent weakness, their weight being twenty tons. About midway of the bridge Chief became unmanageable, and, despite the efforts of Mr. King, with hook and spear, made a fearful onslaught on Bismarck; and such was its fierceness that he was compelled foremost into the river. As the water was very deep, he sustained no injury from the fall, but soon he rose to the surface he emitted from his flexible trumpet such an unearthly yell as to startle the people for miles up and down the river. And then a scene commenced which is indescribable. The elephants on the other side rushed into the river to the assistance of Bismarck. Chief ran off the end of the bridge and into the river, where he renewed the contest with redoubled fury. Emperor (an Indian mammoth) came down the bridge and plunged into the river, where he remained, seeming to enjoy the fun. Their home was a beautiful place, and they are said to have lived very happily together. In July last Placide committed suicide by shooting himself. He had suffered protracted agony from a cancer in his mouth, and, in a letter written just before the deed, he explained that he could endure no more. Placide was prostrated by his death, and her health thereafter steadily declined.

The Increased Suicide Rate.

That there is an alarming increase in the number of suicides in this country is evident on reading the records published in the daily papers. Every day's dispatches chronicle the suicide from three to five persons, whose prominence or the circumstances of whose death make the announcement of general interest. During one month of the present year the weekly average of such suicides was over twenty, and possibly the average has been greatly work succeeded in getting old Bismarck on dry land. Chief and Mary were bound together with chains, and although they looked daggers at each another, they could not hurt themselves or any of the herd. In this manner they were led back into town. Chief was conquered, but not subdued, and the old tire still blazed from his eyes. Mr. Robinson saw that more punishment was necessary to make him perfectly tractable. He ordered him to be taken down into a thicket, where, being properly secured, he was beaten until he cried enough—that is, blew his horn like a good fellow. He then walked to his quarters, and the historical little lamb that followed Mary.—Piedmont Virginian.

—The heirs of Brigham Young brought a restraining suit too late, and the executors have been vested by the Church property of the estate worth at from $500,000 to $750,000. An examination of the books has been going on since Young's death, and it shows that he was indebt to the Church about $1,000,000, which is almost the full value of his property.

WHENEVER a man uses the personal pronoun "I" too much it is always safe to discount his stories about 50 per cent. The pronoun "you" may be connected with small ventures and insignificant achievements, but the pronoun "I" is never used except in the description of immense numbers and very heroic deeds.—*N. Y. VEGETINE

Purifies the Blood, Renovates and Invigorates the Whole System.

ITS MEDICINAL PROPERTIES ARE

Alterative, Tonic, Solvent, and Diuretic.

VEGETINE is safe medicine, carefully selected herbs, roots and barks from the isles of almost every country, and is the result of many years' labor, and thought, and study. It is composed entirely of such ingredients as have proved by their wonderful cures to be the most reliable and effective blood purifiers ever known. Such as Yellow Dock, Sarsaparilla, Stillingia, Burdock, Cleavers, Mandrake, Poke Root, Cherry, Prickly Ash, Cocculus Indicus, Iodide of Potash, Iodine, Manganese, Gentian, Quassia, Saleratus, Salt Rheum, Canker, Palmetto, Queen's Delight, Mercury, Sulphur, Iron, and other valuable remedies, which, by their Alterative, Tonic, Solvent, Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Scrofulous Humors, Ulcers, Syphilitic Complaints, etc., can only be successfully cured through the blood.

For Ulcers and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, Pustules, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, Tetter, Scaldhead, Ringworm, Scurfiness, and Discolorations of the Skin, VEGETINE has never failed to effect a permanent cure.

For Pains in the Back, Kidneys, Urinary Complaints, Dropsy, Female Weakness, Leucorrhœa, Irregularities, Suppressions, and Painful Menstruation, VEGETINE has given perfect satisfaction in every case. It has never been known to fail in the cure of Ulceration of the Uterus, and all diseases arising from a disordered condition of the blood system, acts upon the secretions, and restores the whole system to healthy action.

For Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Habitual Constipation, Palpitation of the Heart, Headache, Piles, Nervousness, General Prostration, Sleeplessness, Dizziness, Neuralgia, Nervous Debility, VEGETINE has given unbounded satisfaction. It purifies the blood, which, if kept pure and healthy, will preserve the health of the whole system, acts upon the secretions, and restores the blood to a healthy condition.

The remarkable cures effected by VEGETINE have induced many physicians and druggists to prescribe and recommend it. It is their own business.

In fact, VEGETINE is the best remedy ever discovered for the above diseases, and is daily curing thousands who are publicly recommending it. BLOOD is LIFE. VEGETINE is placed before the public.

VEGETINE.

SHAKAMAXON SQUARE PHYSICIANS,
Philadelphia, Pa., June 12, 1877.
H. R. STEVENS,
Dear Sir:—Having during the past few years made constant use of VEGETINE when we have desired, by our treatment, to produce a powerful effect upon the blood, we have found it to be a reliable and very favorable remedy. In this respect, it fills its place well, and we cordially indorse it as a good remedy, and believe it to be as much as claimed for it by you.
Yours truly,
J. W. ALDEN, M. D., Druggist.

PHYSICIANS SAY IT.—VEGETINE gives an equal circulation of the blood. All physicians will agree that there is scarcely a disease but that can be traced to impure blood. Dispensed in all parts of the country. VEGETINE is the best blood purifier ever discovered. Sold by druggists. VEGETINE performs its wonderful cures. "Cleanse the blood, and health follows." VEGETINE is a vegetable compound, made from roots, herbs, and barks.

VEGETINE.

H. R. STEVENS, ESQ.: NEWPORT, KY.
Dear Sir:—I sold your VEGETINE for a number of years, and I find it gives satisfaction in every case I dispense.

The two soldiers who deserted from Fort Mackinac on the night of the 14th inst, and who were suspected of having committed the burglaries of the post office and two stores in that village the same night, were arrested on a train of cars near Petoskey the second day after leaving Mackinac. After landing on the south shore of the Straits they went directly through the woods until they struck the railroad near Petoskey, and got aboard a train of cars going south Telegrams having been sent ahead of them, they were recognized and information immediately given to their pursuers, Mr. Thomas Marshall, of Mackinac and the Sheriff of Petoskey, who secured them They were handcuffed and taken to a hotel at Petoskey for the night and locked up in separate rooms. During the night one of them opened a window and threw himself out, without injury. He made his way to a blacksmith shop, broke in the window, and got himself free from the handcuffs, and then went to the railroad office, broke into it, and secured about $25 in money, and fled to the woods. He was discovered and arrested the next day about eight miles from Petoskey The money taken from the postoffice and stores at Mackinac, and the clothing taken by them, were found on their persons. Mr. Marshall took his prisoner safely to Mackinac, and he has been committed to jail for trial at the next session of the Circuit Court.

Senator Hill of Georgia, in a brief speech on the financial question, said the other day: "I do not believe that this country can ever be relieved of its distresses by reason of legislation unless legislation alone never produced these distresses. We have passed through a war." That is a real fact of the situation.

In point of both law and fact, there has been no contraction of the currency. The amount authorized by law is to-day as great as it ever was. And in a question of a country currency has never been procurable on easier terms or lower rates of interest. The prominent fact is the lack of demand for it, the scarcity of borrowers who are ready to run the risk of its profitable use, or who know where they can use it with a reasonable certainty of profit. When business becomes sufficiently active by reason of profit, there will be money enough ready to embark in it. But while the chief demand is a struggle to get it for debt paying, it is correspondingly diverted from its other uses.

The New York World is willing to keep Gen Grant on full pay as long as he will stay in Europe. From 1861 to 1865, the World and its party were much troubled with too much of Gen. Grant in this country.

The Chicago Times protests against the one-sided election investigation set on foot by the Confederate House, as impolitic and mischievous.

Wood cards at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

Colonel Bob Ingersoll, it correctly reported, believes that General Grant will be the next President. And there are hundreds of thousands who want Bob's belief verified.

The war cloud in Europe appears to be fading slightly, and late reports from across the ocean indicate that the difficulties between Russia and England may be settled by a peace Congress of all the nations interested.

Canned goods were never so cheap as now. Buy of Carpenter & Bartholomew.

Liver Is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the Liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. For sale by Geo. W. Crouter.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and it you lead a miserable, dissatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you,—your unreasonable prejudice and scepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of Liver Complaint, or Dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour enough habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents. Three doses will relieve you.

NOTICE

U. S. INTERNAL REVENUE SPECIAL TAX

Under the Revised Statutes of the United States, Section three hundred and fifty-six, every person engaged in any business, manufacture or occupation upon which taxes are imposed by a special tax is required to procure and pay said special tax before commencing or carrying on such business, and to give notice to the Collector of the district of his intention to do so, specifying the trade, business or occupation intended to be carried on, the place where, and the name of the firm or person by whom it is to be carried on. Every person who carries on any business, manufacture or occupation for which a special tax is required, without having paid the special tax therefor, is liable to a penalty of one hundred dollars. Special taxes are payable on the first day of May, and are due for one year. Persons commencing any business, manufacture or occupation after the first day of May must pay the tax from the first day of the month in which they commence it. Special taxes are not transferable. Dealers who remove from one place to another must report such removal to the Collector of the district, and have the change noted on their certificate, or they will be liable to a penalty of fifty dollars. Special taxes must be paid by stamps, which will be issued to the applicant by the Collector on the filing of a proper application, stating the name and place of business of the person making the application. Special taxes must be paid by the person in his own name, or in the name of some firm of which he is a member, and for the place where he actually carries on business. Application should be made to S. S. HAILEY, Collector Internal Revenue at Grand Rapids, Mich.

BURIAL LOTS.—The Charlevoix Township Board have instructed the Highway Commissioner to secure red and white lights to be placed upon the bridge, for the guidance of vessel captains. The arrangements of the lights will be made known at the proper time.

THE contract for planking the channel side of the bridge pier was let by the Town Board to John Nicholls, for the sum of $40. The work was done in a very substantial manner by Mr Nicholl's workmen.

BERNARD BURNS, Esq., of Barnard, Deputy Grand Master of the Grange Jurisdiction, was here on Thursday for New York City, to attend the Supreme Grand Lodge of I. O. L. which convenes on the 13th. Mr. Burns tells us that there will be a general demonstration of all the Lodges in this region at Barnard on the 29th of July.

THE BRIDGE.—The iron work of the new bridge has been all set up, and the structure is now only awaits the planking and the completion of the approaches to be ready for use. It is the embodiment of strength itself, and presents a very fine appearance.

THE success of the "Charlevoix Summer Resort" enterprise is largely due to the energetic efforts of H. W. Page on the part of the "Resorters," and J. Milo Eaton on the part of our Committee A little less energy on the part of those gentlemen would make all the circumstances, have resulted less satisfactorily to all concerned.

FIRST stock of boots goods and dress trimmings ever before kept in Charlevoix, at our store. Fox, Rose & Buttars.

MARINE.—Clearances during the week—Sloops Prince, Hercules; schrs Smith, Redfeat, Minnie Moeller, Len Bigby, Fleetwing, Wescott, Julia Smith. Now in port—schrs Belle and Julia Smith.

On the arrival of the propeller Fountain City Friday evening, the propeller Gazelle took Capt. Gibson for a short ride in Pine Lake. The Captain pronounces her a "very speedy boat."

BURGLARY.—On Monday night some, unknown person pried open a back window of Stockman's hardware store, entered, and robbed the money drawer of its contents—about $10. On the same night some person entered Dr. Lewis' drug store in the same manner, and took about $2.50.

Boots and shoes as cheap as ever at Fox & Washburn's.

DROWNED.—Joseph Shores, a somewhat aged resident of Norwood Township, was drowned at Burns' mill pond, in Marion, on Thursday. It appears he was fishing, and was taken with a fit and fell into the water. Several other persons were standing by, but were apparently unable to save him.

HIRAM CARTER, of Norwood, recently returned from a visit to his old home in Plattsburg, N. Y. The Plattsburg Republican has the following:

HIRAM CARTER, Esq., brother of our esteemed citizen, Samuel Carter, of this village, has been on a visit to his friends in this section for a few weeks past. He has come in to Norwood, Charlevoix Co., Mich., for which place he left on Wednesday last. Uncle Hiram, as he is familiarly called, is one of the old pioneers in the State, having been made a Master in 1823, Royal Arch Mason in 1826, and Knight Templar in 1826. THE RESORT.

A Fixed Reality—The Transfer Made.

On Tuesday the following named gentlemen organized with the "Charlevoix Summer Resort Association" organized in town:

H. W. Page, J. L. Schring, T. S. Cobb, and Judge H. D. Wells—Chicago.

John Calkins and N. W. W. Smith—Grand Rapids.

H. H. Anderson and Wm. Carter—Fort Wayne, Ind.

The purpose of their visit was to close the negotiations between the Association and the people of Charlevoix, for the location of the Association in this Township.

The proposed twenty-five acres lying at the foot of Pine lakes, and connecting with the lagoon of round lake, was viewed, thoroughly examined, and the deed for a deed duly made out and placed in the hands of the committee.

Five members of the Association have already pledged themselves to erect cottages this season, and more than that number will undoubtedly be erected. It is the purpose of the Association to lease and improve the grounds at an early day.

The gentlemen composing the Committee all express themselves highly pleased with the result. On the day of their visit everything combined to render Nature even more beautiful than it but wont. The lush, verdant foliage on the sides of the forest, the broad, glittering Pine lake, the gently undulating hills in the distance, made a picture which, to eyes unaccustomed to such natural beauty, was truly fascinating, and could not fail to charm.

PATTMASTER Chipman has commenced plowing and scraping the hill at the north end of the bridge to grade up to the approaches of the new bridge. As the floor of the new structure stands about five feet above the level of the old one, considerable grading will be necessary.

Prepared Cocoanut for cake & puddings at See & Washburn's.

PERSONAL.—R. W. Smith, founder and President of the Smith Bridge Company, of Toledo, which has the contract for the Charlevoix bridge, was in town last week a few days.

—Rev. Joseph Cater, of Sylvania, Ohio, arrived here on Tuesday, too late to attend the funeral of his father.

—Rev. C. N. Coulter and wife were in town Saturday.

—Mrs. Buttars, mother of A. Buttars, Esq., arrived from Port Austin by propeller Fountain City, Friday, and will remain during the Summer.

—Mrs. W. P. Edson, of this place, left town yesterday for Jackson county, Wis., to visit her mother, who is lying dangerously ill.

—Hon. H. H. Wells of Kewaunee, one of the members of the Resort Association, who was here last week, was for three years Presiding Judge of the Court of Arbitrary Claims, which was instituted for the settlement of the Geneva Award.

—Mr. Cameron, brother of A. J. Cameron, who lately arrived here from Texas, is a resident of the "Lone Star State," and served throughout the rebellion as a Captain in the Confederate service. He owns up to being a representative "rebel," but the hatchet having been buried he is an earnest advocate of the pacification policy, and is thoroughly "reconstructed." Mr. Cameron will remain possibly during the summer.

COMMENCEMENT DAY was observed Sunday at the M. E. Church, and the services both morning and evening were of more than ordinary interest. Ten years ago the same day was observed by almost sixteen children, and a few adults in the wing of the old Chamberlain building, with plank for seats, and a dry goods box for a desk. The progress of the Charlevoix Sunday School up to the present time has been fully in keeping with, if not in advance of the growth of everything else about us, and among all the features of our society is the least of the most satisfactory, as indicating the moral and religious status of our community.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 21st, Mr. Perry stated that he was instructed by a majority of the Finance Committee to report back without amendment the House bill forbidding the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes and to recommend its passage. Several other bills were reported from committees and placed on the calendar, among which was the House bill for the relief of settlers on public lands under the Pre-emption law. A new Conference Committee was appointed on the Military Academy Appropriation bill. The amendment to the bill to place the name of Gen. Sheridan on the retired list, providing for the addition of the name of Gen. Grant, was reported and passed by 32 to 26. An amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Wm. Shields on the pension roll at the rate of $30 a month, was adopted—yeas 33, nays 25—and the bill, reported—33 to 32. The joint resolution authorizing the transfer of the bill, it was objected—yeas 30, nays 31—and a motion to reconsider the vote was entered. The Army Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole of the House, pending which the House took a recess. The morning hour was devoted to the consideration of the bill providing for the payment of $2 a month to every pensioner who has had a leg amputated at the hip joint; making it unlawful for any attorney or claim agent to demand or receive for his services in a pension case a greater sum than ten dollars. Several proposed amendments to the Army Appropriation bill were disposed of in Committee of the Whole.

In the Senate, on the 25th, the consideration of the existing treaty between China and the United States, allowing unrestricted immigration from China, might wisely be modified so as to enhance the legal rights of both Governments, and providing for the assertion of the Executive to the authority to which the bill to provide for the publication of the laws of consul, under the Homestead, Preemption and Timber Culture acts was passed. Mr. Sherman's house a bill was referred to apply the proceeds of the sale of public lands to the education of the people. The Army Appropriation bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, and several proposed amendments were disposed of.

A BILL was introduced and referred in the Senate, on the 27th, to repeal the existing taxes on manufactures, on banks and bankers, and to impose taxes on dividends in excess of 5 per cent. A resolution was agreed to requesting of the President copies of all correspondence, not already submitted, and of all memorials and minutes in possession of the Government, relating to the selection of Mr. Maurice DeFrese as one of the Commissioners under the Treaty of Washington on the Fisheries questions. After the further consideration of the bill to provide a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, a motion to take up the bill to forbid the further retirement of legal-tender notes was agreed to—26 to 26. Several bills were introduced and referred in the House, among which were the following: To negotiate the sale of United States securities; to establish a permanent banking fund; to encourage and aid the higher education of the colored race in the District of Columbia and in the several States; to establish a National University at Washington. The Army Appropriation bill was further amended in Committee of the Whole and reported to the House, and a vote on the amendment increasing the limitation of the strength of the army from 30,000 to 35,000 men—yeas 93 to 93—was taken. Mr. Garfield changed from yea to nay, so that he might move a reconsideration of the vote then being 117 to 119. Messrs. Garfield and Hewitt rose simultaneously to move for reconsideration, and the latter was recognized by the Speaker, who claimed that the Chairman bound by all parliamentary practice to recognize the gentleman in charge of the bill. A motion to lay on the table was carried to reconsider was finally carried—121 to 117—thus limiting the strength of the army to 30,000 men. Messrs. Patterson, Williams (Mich.), Wigginton, and all the Democrats except Hogan voted with the Republicans in favor of the amendment increasing the limit to 35,000 men.

DOMESTIC.

THE United States Treasury Department has discontinued the payment of standard silver dollars for Treasury notes, at the New York Sub-Treasury, for the reason that the silver thus issued, instead of going into general circulation, is returned to it in the payment of custom dues, the importer thus saving the gold premium. For similar reasons the amount of silver issued at Baltimore, for Treasury notes, is limited to $5 at a single payment.

AT the Cabinet meeting in Washington, on the 21st, Secty Sherman submitted a financial statement, showing a deficiency in the fiscal year, so far, of $11,033,000 less than to the corresponding time of last year; also showing a decrease in expenditures of $5,000,000.

Pleasing the Children.

Some little girls, the youngest class of a private school in an adjoining city, following the custom of their elders, determined, a few days ago, to hold a fair for the benefit of some orphans. The matter had been fully and properly canvassed, price of admission (five cents) agreed upon, fancy-work committees appointed, contributions solicited, lotteries arranged, and all seemed to be working nicely after the manner of grown folks. The question where the fair was to be held was the only one unsettled, and this for a while bid fair to be an obstacle that would block the wheels of progress and turn into an utter failure an enterprise that had been commenced with such high hopes of abundant success. At whose house shall the fair be held? There was sickness at one, company at another, one's mother was too busy and another's thought it would be too much trouble. At last a little tot, the tiniest of the class, said, "I think you can have it at our house. My mother says nothing is too much trouble when it pleases her children. I know she will be glad to have you come."

Thus spoke the child of a wise woman. She went to the evidence of her wisdom than to the testimony of her child, given in that simple, artless way. She knew her, that we do not see in person as we do now in spirit. Brighter than any jewels in Victoria's crown shines the unpretending light of a mother in the treatment and home education of her children she deserves the thanks of the world. In every one we see, in the effect of the teaching of this mother is a more lowly station, the same wise treatment that produces the same effect on her children and all around her? Is there a mother of any one of those little school girls who will not feel a regret when she hears the child say, "Marie's mother says nothing is too much trouble to do for her children." If such there be, we are sorry for her, and for her children and her children's children.

Home influence is in this country too much occupied with the labor of accumulating worldly wealth to attend to the proper instruction of their children. They are entirely willing to give all the money necessary to pay for instructions in school or college, but cannot spend the time to give them personal attention.

The education of children should begin with their earliest infancy. Lessons of obedience, respect, reverence and love should be taught long before school days commence, and be taught in a spirit of confidence and love. When your child believes in you and knows that you are willing to do every good thing you consider for his good; when he trusts your powerceta as she springs lightly over the grass and sound the exquisitely modulated laughter—no one shouts loudly in this refined twentieth century—of her merry companions.

In the back garden, on a green, clover-sweet grass-plat, stands a broad, deep basket of newly-washed, snowy white linen, and a hanging-out machine, planted firmly in the middle of the plat, is industriously raising and lowering its wooden arms, grasping various pieces in its wonderfully outstretched hands, and hanging them upon the stout no-clothes-pins line which is slowly revolving around it, and to which they adhere without farther trouble.

In the dairy the rosy-cheeked dairymaid is reading a love poem while the automatic churner is churning the beautiful white cow that stands just outside the door; in the kitchen the cook is indolently cooking to and fro in a low rocking-chair, watching the "magic rolling-pin" roll out the paste for her pies, ready to stop its pendulum-like movement the moment the crust is smooth and thin enough; and a small servant-boy, with his hands in his pockets, lounges against the wall in one corner near a sail stool, whistling softly to himself as he waits until the pair of shoes the electric blacking-brush is polishing thereon attains the proper degree of brilliancy and mirror-likeness.

This is a prosperous place, this domain of Leon Fishback, Esq., and Leon Fishback himself is a tall, handsome, portly, positive man of one-and-thirty—a bachelor, who gives a home to his widowed sister and her four half-orphaned children, and in return is taken care of by her, with the assistance of the old housekeeper—to tell the truth, with a great deal of assistance from the cold housekeeping, as well as by her brother was ever taken care of by any sister.

Still, people, as people will—especially people with grown-up single daughters—wondered that he had never married. It was not for want of opportunity he had not done so—oh, no indeed!—for a dozen lovely girls, half a dozen more or less charming widows, and several ladies of neither class, had, since his coming into the property of his uncle and godfather, Leon Fishback, Sen., (whose ashes in a solid gold casket stood in a sort of shrine, made of a hundred rare woods, in the south drawing-room), intimated to him, in every way that the sheltering sensitiveness of womanhood would allow, their perfect willingness—nay, anxiety—to assume the role of mistress of the Fishback mansion.

But Leon had walked calmly among them, dispensing hospitality, kind words and gracious smiles with the strictest impartiality, distinguishing none by the slightest reference, until a few weeks before this beautiful June day when his young guests merrily called, "Follow-follow-follow me," to their highly-polished admirers on the closely-shaven lawn.

Then came to visit his sister an old school friend, Laura Beardsley by name, who had been residing in a far-distant state, but with whom the sister had kept up a warm correspondence ever since they parted at the college door the day on which each was published full with loud acclamations as "Mistress of Arts."

Miss Beardsley is a lovely woman of eight-and-twenty summers, looking at least five summers less, with an exceptionally-sweet voice, an exceptionally-bright smile, an exceptionally-graceful figure and exceptionally-winning ways. And to this bewitching woman has Leon Fishback, the hitherto apparently unimpressible bachelor, devoted himself since the moment he took her slender little hand in his and bade her welcome to his home. And it is by her side he loiters, interrupted by the numerous others, the ping, pang, pleasant, vine-wreathed bay-window of the library as the fair-haired girl comes flying across the garden, parasol by her side, and flying bells.

Laura starts from her seat with a blush and, leaning from the window, surveys the group them away. Bella, dear. They are dancing on the flower bed." And as the girl obediently turns and speeds in the opposite direction, she notes how pretty head, and, looking at her companion, says, "How much Bella is like her sister Teresa—that is, when Teresa was only sixteen."

"Is she?" asks Mr. Fishback.

"Why, don't you remember?" says the lady.

"I do not," replies Mr. Fishback, with emphasis.

Miss Laura makes two interrogation points of her silken eyebrows, opens her mouth to speak, thinks better of it, closes her red lips firmly, and turns to the window again to see the Follow-follow-me-ers stop playing and gather in a group, with their eyes fixed upon a magnificent, gaily decorated with flags, which is floating between Heaven and earth, as it slowly descends toward the lawn. In a few moments it touches the ground, and a handsome young fellow leaps out, and is greeted with many exclamations of pleasure and surprise.

"Your brother Reginald," says Miss Beardsley. "So soon returned from London?" Why, he only started a few days ago."

"Yes, flying ship American Eagle—fastest of the Air Line. I heard of her arrival last night—asleep this morning, when it was shouted by the telephone at the station below."

"Then you flew away?"

"Was with her you looked for blackberries. I never knew you to find any—not with me, sir."

"Laura, how blind you were! I sought her society only to be near you. I declare, upon my word and honor, I lingered by her side for hours and hours in the hope that you would join us for a moment or two during the time, and when you did, in that moment or two was concentrated the joy of the whole day. You were so proud, so cold, so reserved, I did not dare to approach you save through your friend; and—"

"And you did not hurry yours elf in seclusion for two years after she ¡illed you and married Frank Huntington, ?" she asks, as he pauses.

"Great heavens! how preposterous! Laura, I swear—"

But, as he is about to swear, enter a procession of small nephews and nieces and attendant friends, the leader of which carries an odd-looking box.

"See, uncle!" the bright-eyed little fellow calls out as he approaches. "I found this old phonograph on the top shelf of your closet, where I was looking for your fish line to play horse with, and it talks like everything."

With this he begins to turn the metal crank, and a voice—a somewhat shrill young voice, the voice of Teresa, sister of Bella—whilom friend of Laura Beardsley—begins to speak:

"Look, Leon, my own, I will grant your impassioned prayer, and breathe the words you long to hear into this magical casket, and then, when you are lonely or inclined to doubt me, [pauses one, you can call them forth to bring back the smiles to your dear face, and joy to your dear heart. I do return the love you so ardently avow, and I will marry you when mamma gives her consent. Until then no lips shall touch the ips made sacred by your kiss, no hand shall clasp the hand that wears your lovely diamond ring. But, oh, Leon dear, try to like Laura a little for my sake. I know she is all that you say she is—affected, cold-hearted, haughty and disagreeable. I am just naughty enough to be pleased when you tell me her beauty, as much admired by others, particularly Frank Huntington, fades into utter insignificance beside that of your own little Teresa—but, my Leon, try, oh! try, to tolerate her, for, strange as it may appear to you, disliking her as you do, I am quite fond of her. Good-night, beloved. Dream of your Teesa."

"That miserable phonograph!" said Mr. Fishback; "I thought I destroyed it long ago," as he angrily snatched it from the hands of the astonished discoverer.

"What did our landmark ancestors do without these glorious inventions?" murmured Miss Laura, as she quietly fainted away for the first and only time in her life.

"If ever you go prowling around my room again," continued Mr. Fishback addressing his unfortunate nephew, and supporting Miss Beardsley with one hand, while he flung the tell-tale out of the window, "I'll smoke you in a dozen pieces as it touched the ground with a shrill ear-splitting shriek—"I'll apply the double-barreled self-acting spanking machine until you roar for mercy."

The procession, considerably demoralized, started on the double-quick for the door, and Mr. Fishback, looking upon the inanimate form he held in his arms, and, at the same time, his pretty head with his clinched hand, "She will never, never look at me again!"

But she did, and, what's more, she married him a month after—to the marvelous progress toward perfect womanhood in this wonderful twentieth century!—although they have been man and wife for some twenty years, she has never once said to him, "That voice!"

A Modern Application of Damon and Pythias.

A Gratiot avenue saloon-keeper was sorting out the lead nickels from his till yesterday morning, preparatory to the honest labors of a rainy day, when a smiling stranger came in and said:

"Old friend, I've got a bet of ten dollars on your head."

The saloonist felt all over the top of his head, found no bettlers, and looked for a further explanation from the stranger whose coat at the elbows seemed bonnd to secure ventilation.

"The case is this," continued the man, "I bet my friend B this you are a well-read man. To prove it, I have come to ask you if you know what Damon did when the governor refused to doubt that Pythias would return. While I am sipping my lager you can jog your memory a little."

He pushed a glass across the counter, but the saloonkeeper seemed to be hunting for something down among the kegs.

"It's only a trifle—small change—but the principle is what I want to establish. I've smoked the man, asheauxions, shoved the glass round.

"I expect so," came from down among the kegs.

"Damon and Pythias were chums, you know. When Damon wiped off his chin, Pythias pulled down his vest. Same persons. While I am drinking you can ponder over my original query."

"Shust so," replied a voice, as the kegs were rolled about.

"If Damon had the headache," continued the man, trying to work the pump projecting above the bar, "Pythias had a surge over on the office. If Pythias said he would take sugar in his, Damon sweetened up with New Orleans molasses. All this you know, of course, but what did Damon do when Pythias did not return?"

"And behind now show you what he did?" replied the saloonist, as he rose up with a metallic spigget in his hand.

"When the Phildons did not hurry up Damon thinks dreadful sore that she—and——"

The stranger got out, and holding the door from the outside he looked through the glass and said:

"I am now convinced that you never read a line of Shakespeare! While Damon was searching under the bar, Pythias drew and drank three glasses of beer!"

The saloonist smiled, laid away his spiggo, and as he good-naturedly pulled open the door he called to the stranger at the curb-stone:

"When Phildous rhas drawing dot peer, Damon vhas moofing der pump into der schilling keg!"

A tremor passed over the vag. He turned pale, showed his teeth, and as he started for the wood-yard opposite he replied:

"Hanged if he didn't—Pythias wants rest!"—Detroit Free Press.

A most deplorable accident occurred, Monday morning, at the residence of Mr. Charles Cottrell, an engineer, living at No. 818 Exchange street, in this city. Preparations were in progress for removal to another house, but at the time of the tragedy Mr. Cottrell was down town. Mrs. Cottrell was making a call at the house of a neighbor, and the only inmates of the house were Mrs. Elizabeth Bowker, who was a widowed sister of Mrs. Cottrell, and Charlie and Gracie Cottrell, aged respectively six and four years. The children were in Mrs. Bowker's room, which was on the second floor, and knowing that his aunt was about to take up her carpet, Charlie thought to take a hand in the work. He went to the wardrobe, climbed up on a chair, and began to search for a tack hammer in a drawer where miscellaneous articles of small convenience were kept. He failed to find what he wanted, but he did find a four-barreled Sharp's pistol, which at once engrossed his attention. After handling it for awhile, he cocked it just as Mrs. Bowker appeared at the door of the room. The lad, thoughtlessly and without any conception of the great danger of the act, pointed the pistol at her, with the remark, "Look out, Aunt Lib, I'm going to shoot you." As he said this, he pulled the trigger, and there was a report, accompanied by the scream of the lady as she fell to the floor. Little Gracie began to cry, and Charlie, comprehending that something terrible had happened, ran to the prostrate lady and begged her to get up and stop acting that way, as it frightened his sister so much. Blood was now flowing upon the carpet, and the children, losing all presence of mind, stood there without making an effort to summon assistance. After recovering from the first shock, Mrs. Bowker managed to arise, and staggering to the down stairs by aid of the railing and opened the front door, bleeding profusely at that time. She met Miss Van Pilson, who lives next door, and had just strength to call out that Charlie had shot her with a revolver, when she again fell to the floor. In a few moments Mrs. Cottrell and several neighbors were gathered around her, and she was carried to her bed. Dr. Gallagher was summoned without delay, and finding that the bullet had entered the right breast and penetrated the cavity in the direction of the heart, he pronounced the case hopeless. Dr. Barker was called in, and the two physicians did what they could to alleviate the sufferings of the lady. She stated to them the details of the shooting as above given, and the little boy, who was greatly grieved by the result of his thoughtlessness, made a like statement. At half-past nine o'clock, just an hour after the shooting, the patient died. She was perfectly conscious to the last, and requested that she be buried by the side of her husband.

The Coroner was notified, and, an examination being made, a verdict of death by accidental shooting was rendered.—St. Louis Republican.

Undue Familiarity.

The late Dr. Sprague, of Albany, was a gentleman of the old school type, of remarkable courteousness of manner and of corresponding reverence of feeling. He never tried with the manners of prominent men, and it is hardly probable that he could suppose anyone would use his name with undue familiarity. The following anecdote illustrative of this characteristic of the grand old man, was related to us by one of his sons, and subsequently acknowledged, with a hearty laugh, by the older son of whom it was told:

One day, at the bankside, this son, then in business in Albany, but living at his father's house, spoke of "Charley Bridgman." The name arrested his father's attention, and he said:

"My son, of whom are you speaking?"

"Of Mr. Bridgman, father," was the reply.

"Not of Rev. Dr. Bridgman, surely, William?"

"Why yes, father; why not?"

"Why not? my son, because such familiarity in connection with a prominent preacher is unbecoming. I am quite surprised and shocked at your freedom; and I hope he has no knowledge of it."

"Why yes, he has, father. I have called him 'Charley' to his face!

"'Charley' to his face; and does he call you William?"

"Well not father no; I can't say that he does."

"Well, what does he call you then?"

"Generally he calls me 'Bill.'"

"This was too much for the good Doctor, and with disgust expressed sympathy with the mirth that rang round the ten-table, he made good his retreat.—Chicago Standard.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Prof. H. Y. Palmer and wife sailed for America, May 18th, in the Scythia.

—Senator Don Cameron's eldest daughter will have charge of her five brothers and sister at Harrisburgh, and his bride will have sole possession of the Senator's home in Washington.

—Edwin Booth has refused to play at Washington since Lincoln's murder by his brother John Wilkes; hence Capitolian folk dissions of seeing the great actor have to go to Baltimore whenever he has an engagement out there.

—Probably the smallest paper in the country, if not in the world, is published at Orlando, Fla. Its size is two and a half by three inches, and it claims a circulation of 1,200. It is printed monthly, and its name is the Florida Mite.

—President Hayes recently received the following letter from a man in Vermont: "Decided to see Washington to the best advantage I will be ask you if I can make my headquarters with you at the Executive Mansion, as I have a prejudice against staying with the public and private boarding-houses are not quite up to my standard of living."

—Charlotte Cushman's grave was recently pointed out to a reverent pilgrim by a workman in the cemetery, who said: "She was considerable of a woman, for a play-actress." It is on the eastern summit of the principal hill in Mount Auburn, only in sight of the Boston and the Cambridge she so dearly loved. Only a small white stone, bearing her name, marks the grave.

—You can't most always tell sometimes often how things are going to pan out. Ex-Solicitor-Gen. Baker, of Quebec, at the recent provincial election, prepared for a grand jubilation over his certain return: the teams for the triumphal procession were hitched up, the band was ready, and the torches were ready. At five o'clock he was 168 ahead, and everything was lovely; at 6:30 some back districts were heard from and his majority was down to fifty; at 7:30 came the dispatch: "Seventeen behind; don't illuminate." They didn't.

—Edison got the hint of his phonograph—so, at least, they say—from Ben Butler, who, examining a telephone, said to him, "Now you must make something to record these sounds." Some one said to the great inventor, who lay taken only 500 patents, with many back districts of his brain yet to lear from. "I wonder if Ben Butler has ever thought to invent a beard." "Of course I could," was the reply, and he showed how the point of a needle could be made to set upon a small ratchet-wheel, and by a system of cogs would turn the gimlet and drive it through the board!

—Wm. Henry Poore, the compiler of the Congressional Directory, called on John Morrissey for a short sketch of his life, and asked what his profession was, to which the ex-Congressman said, with some bitterness, "Well, I suppose you had better put me down as a faro-dealer?" "Oh, you don't mean it," said Maj. Poore, "you can't you give some other occupation?" "Yes, of course I can," replied Morrissey. "Give me credit for my old trade if you will; call me an iron-monger, for that's what I am if I'm anything." And he appears in the Directory as an iron-molder.

A Baptism of Hundreds.

On Sunday morning the roads and lanes leading across Chimborazo Park were filled with persons, white and black, male and female, from the gray-headed sire to the infant in arms, all hurrying in the direction of Bird's Creek to witness the great baptizing. By ten o'clock in the morning at least 4,000 persons had gathered on the York River Railroad and the surrounding hills, and the long line of new canvests, male and female, in their white robes on the ground and stood in readiness on either side of the stream—the males on one side and the females on the other.

The females were dressed in white, with white turbans around their heads, and the men with white shirts, and white handkerchiefs around their heads, awaited patiently under the burning rays of the vertical sun the arrival of their baptizer. After the singing of a hymn and a short prayer, the Rev. Scott Gwathmey, accompanied by one of his deacons, stepped down into the water, and the baptizing was begun.

The females were served first, and they were quickly disposed of, to make room for others in waiting. The men outnumbered the women. By 12:30 the ceremony was over, and 230 persons had been immersed by one man. The converts, for the most part, were very quiet and undemonstrative, but occasionally some manifestations of religious fervor would break out. One old woman, at least seventy years of age, walking on crutches, hobbled to the pool and was among those baptized. She was taken in the arms of a stalwart deacon and borne over the dressing-room.—Richmond (Va.) State.

A Texas paper relates the story of a family who left Terrell, that State, the other day, in a two-horse wagon. Just outside the town the man and wife quarrelled. The woman jumped out of the wagon, unhitched one of the horses, and declared that she meant to play quits. The girl joined the mother, and the two rode away. The old man and the boy and the other horse were left to get along as best they could.

THE SENTINEL.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 11, - - 1878

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, June 7, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL

The departure of Gilmore's band together with the notoriety growing out of the event bring up a flood of reminiscences of which Mr. Gilmore is the centre figure. He it was who made the Boston Peace Jubilee possible, and the gentlemen who undertook the deficiency department, miserable, who led the red-coated blacksmiths a lively dance on the "anvil chorus," and who touched off the artillery accompaniment while the impecunious small boy smacked his lips at the knot-holes in the high surrounding fence and fervently thanked the leading spirit for Peace and an outside show. It seemed to be a toss up in the National mind when the whole thing was over, whether or not the Jubilee brought an overwhelming avalanche of Peace, but the nation was entirely harmonious in bestowing upon Mr. Gilmore the praise due pluck, energy and the first class intentions. These characteristics have been fully exercised since his appointment to the leadership of the New York Twenty-second Regiment Band, and he goes to Europe with a company of musicians, which even the hard-hearted critic of the Tribune acknowledges to be a good one, conscienously trained.

"P. Gilmore, Director" is his official title, and I don't know as I've even seen his Christain name in full array, but in the time gone by—before the glorious dawn of Peace in Boston—back in the days when he was tied home by the ear for wearing out the knees of his little pantaloons to the marble season, he answered to the name of Pat. Patrick would be the strongest form my levity dare take were the gentlemen this side of the Atlantic.

The departure of Gilmore leaves a clear field for Theodore Thomas and his band who have just begun a season of summer evening concerts at the Hippodrome—Gilmore's old quarters. On the opening night over nine thousand people crowded the vast building.

The day is rapidly approaching when the respectable New York citizen will have to carry around his neck a card bearing a certificate of good moral character from his clergyman, printed in nice large type, and backed up by an interpreter for the benefit of those guardians of the peace who cannot read even the largest letters known to modern type manufacturers.

A few days ago, a lady, while shopping in one of our well known stores, inadvertently took up a parasol, thinking it her own which she already had on her arm. She was immediately pounced upon by the proprietor, searched without success, arrested by an able bodied policeman, taken to the station house, where the officer accused her of being a common thief, locked up for the night in a cell, and brought into court the next morning. During the examination, the evidence came out that the prisoner was a thoroughly respectable lady, and that she tried to explain how the blunder was committed, but was marched off, and as imprisoned a well known thief." Another beautiful feature of this case was shown when the lady testified that, after much pleading she was allowed to send for her lawyer. She gave the messenger fifty cents for the errand, and he put the money in his pocket, put a stamp on the note, and sent it by mail, and, if the lawyer had not seen a notice of the arrest in the papers, the lady would have probably suffered through a longer delay. The only ray of common sense connected with the case which has yet penetrated to the public eye, is the emphatic way in which the judge expressed his disgust at the whole proceeding, and threatened the immediate punishment of those through whom the wretched blunder was made, branding an innocent lady with a foul title.

Another auction sale of patents has lately taken place here at which a most miscellaneous lot of these "children of the brain" were disposed of. Almost everything in the way of a device was represented from an coat lounger to a quartz crusher, from a clothes pin to a perpetual motion machine. This varied assortment naturally brought all kinds of prices from ten cents to several thousand of dollars. As usual, too, it was the little simple contrivances that commanded the highest figures, while flying machines and new fangled steam engines went begging at a dollar or so, some such trifle as a door spring or an egg beater would become the subject of spirited competition and would finally be knocked down at a price to rejoice the heart of its fortunate projector.

One of the results of the recent introduction of silver dollars and silver change has been to turn into the subtreasury here a tremendous and steady stream of copper and nickle coins for redemption in the more valuable metal. To show how enormous the influx is I will specify some of the reported figures. For instance, three of the city railway companies send in on an average $1,200 per day in this little stuff. One bank sends in $1,000 a week and two of the large ferry companies about $2,000. Many city brokers receive and transmit considerable quantities and from out of town comes probably not less than $10,000 per week additional. All together I suppose the receipts of this "petty cash" amounts at present to not less than $20,000 a week.

Of course all this has to be counted and examined for counterfeits, mutilated pieces, etc., and when one reflects that this $20,000 is made up of from half a million to one million coins, the amount of work thereby imposed upon the sub Treasury may be imagined. So accurately and systematically is this labor performed, however, that the mistakes made are astonishingly small. In one case $75,000 in small change was counted with a discrepancy of $2.

Out of these accumulations, the sub-Treasury supplies all the local demands for these coins and the surplus is shipped on to the Philadelphia Mint there to be held or to be gradually returned to circulation according to the needs of general trade. At the time that the above statistics were obtained there were lying in the sub Treasury vaults almost $100,000 of copper and nickel, packed in bags, that would by sheer weight protect themselves from would-be thieves, quite independent of thick walls and tripple doors.

While his physician and friends hope for the best, it seems probable that before this letter is in print William Cullen Bryant, the poet and journalist, will have passed away. While attending the ceremonies in Central Park on the occasion of the unveiling the bust of Mazzini, the Italian patriot, he stood with uncovered head under a hot sun. At the close of his address he appeared to be suffering slightly, although he made no complaint at the time. Later in the day as he was ascending the steps of a friend's house, he fell heavily upon the stone platform and was taken up unconscious. He was removed to his own residence where, as I am writing, he lies in a critical condition.

Born at Cummington, Mass., Nov. 3, 1794, Mr. Bryant has witnessed changes in this city while to a majority of the present generation would read like a romance.

He lived here when what is now its business center was considered out of town, and as few men have been privileged, has watched the growth of New York from boundary to boundary as increasing prosperity threw out its greedy fingers for new territory. To any one at all familiar with this city this growth can be brought to mind when it is remembered that the famous Crystal Palace in which Horace Greeley was interested failed, because it was too far up town, and yet it was situated at the point known as Reservoir Square, below 42d street. Now days if a man live anywhere below 125th street he feels as though he ought to go home to lunch.

At the age of 15 Mr. Bryant wrote "The Embargo," a political satire in verse. He was graduated from Williams College and admitted to the bar in 1816. During the following year he published "Thanatopsis," which is probably the poem by which he is best known. In 1826 he became editor of the Evening Post, advocating free trade. Mr Bryant is probably the ablest exponent of this theory among New York journalists, and many and bitter were the battles he fought with Greeley, through their respective journals. It is stated that the latter once used the remark "You lie, you villain, you lie," as a gentle hint to Mr. Bryant that his ideas on the subject of free trade were not agreeable. In 1869 Mr. Bryant published his translation of Illiad. The present is his first illness since a boy, and I trust that this sketch of his life may turn out to be a passing tribute to the man whom the Evening Press calls New York's first citizen, rather than that it should bear mourning to those who, from his spotless character and eminent abilities count themselves his friends and admirers.

Devastation and Death.

Destructive Tornadoes in Fayettsville and Wisconsin and Illinois—Great Loss of Life and Property.

A tornado struck Mineral Point, Wis., about five o'clock on the afternoon of the 22d, doing great damage to property and resulting in the loss of several lives. The following particulars are given by telegraph:

A large stone brewery and several buildings surrounding it were demolished.

At the residence of John Spaneler there was a large family reunion. Mrs. Waller, mother of John Waller, one of the party, was instantly killed. The rest of the inmates of the house miraculously escaped with only slight injuries. The residence of Judge Crosbree was also struck by the storm, and his mother, an aged lady, killed.

After wrecking Mr. Spaneler's house, the cyclone lifted the house of Mr. Leonard from its foundation and shivered it to atoms in the air, carrying with it Mrs. Leonard, whose body was found about 150 yards distant, mangled in a fearful manner.

It next carried off the house of John Coleman, badly injuring Mr. Coleman, his two daughters and Tip Allen, who were in the house at the time.

Benjamin Bennett's house was totally destroyed, and Mrs. Bennett thrown over in a manure pile, escaping with but little injury.

The houses of James Prince and William Jacks were destroyed.

At the brewery of C. Gellman the storm did the greatest amount of damage, carrying off the house of Mr. Gellman and Mrs. Adams, and badly injuring a Miss Zimmer. The brewery building and malt house united there with were totally demolished, and a number of valuable horses killed.

The houses situated in the summer-garden of John Jauck, opposite the brewery building, were destroyed, and Mrs. Myers and Mary Jenck were killed. Mr. Bohan's family, who lived a short distance from the garden, were all dangerously injured, and Mrs. Bohan died about midnight.

The house of Martin O'Dowd was reduced to ruins. Mr. Beardsley's house and barn were carried seven or eight rods from the foundations. William Cocking's house was taken, and nothing left but a few pieces of the furniture.

A school house, about two and a half miles east of the city, was carried off, with the teacher and scholars. Two of the scholars, a sister and sister, were killed and the teacher slightly injured. The teacher, while holding one of the smaller scholars in her arms, was thrown several rods. Most of the children are unhurt.

MINERAL POINT, Wis., May 25.

The storm originated twelve miles southwest of this city, doing no considerable damage until within one mile of here, when it struck H. Phillips' farm and carried it away, killing his cow. After leaving the Town of Mineral Point it divided, and came together again six miles east of here, at the town of Waldwick. It swept everything before it for a distance of twelve miles, when it again divided. Mr. Kramer's place was totally destroyed, and the next was Powers'. About fifty houses and barns were destroyed from here to Adamsville. Between this place and Darlington three more big persons were killed, and the school-house, church and store demolished. Moore's place is in ruins, and four persons killed. Two families are blown away, and as yet nothing has been heard of them. From there to Perry is eight miles, and nothing is left where the tornado struck. Perry is carried away, or destroyed, and long ruin is. The city is estimated at $100,000, and fifteen lives lost. The track of the storm, ten miles southwest, is completely demolished. Several reported injuries still reported, all of a fatal. Six funerals took place to this city on yesterday.

MADISON, Wis., May 26.

The tornado which passed over this place last night swept the lakes to some extent more destructive than was thought last night. The storm came from the direction of the southwest, passing through a section of the State where no telegraphic communication are established, hence details of the great destruction and loss of life are meagre. Enough has been received, however, to show that the devastation and sacrifice of property and life has been appalling. In the vicinity of Prairie, twenty-five miles southwest of this city, from Sauk's Prairie, Mound Versona to Paoli, the storm seems to have done widespread damage. From twenty-five to thirty barns and farm houses were blown down, some of them utterly destroyed and the debris carried off before the mighty avalanche of wind, some of it falling twelve and fifteen miles away, one instance of a house falling in Lake Mendota, near this city. Four horses or children persons are known to be killed, and large numbers severely injured. Perhaps yet terrible descriptions are given of the terrible effect of the tornado. Teams and wagons are reported taken from roads, and carried in the air and dashed to the ground. At Dr. George Peck's, near Dragon, the valuable horses in a pasture were taken up 100 feet in the air, carried fifty rods, and dashed to the earth, killing them instantly. The storm came from the direction of Mineral Point, where it wrought such terrible damage, rained from the ground seven or eight miles southwest of Madison, and again struck the earth near Fort Atkinson, northeast of here. Near Primrose and Paoli the storm seemed from a half to a dozen miles in width, and for everything before it, mowing down trees, fences, barns, houses and shrubbery as if with a scythe.

RACINE, Wis., May 25.

The peculiarities of the tornado, which swept through this town last Thursday do not seem to be appreciated by any of the correspondents. The terrific and threatening cloud, which expression fully describes the scenario, was seen by a witness who explains that it was in reality a jostling together of two clouds approaching from opposite directions, and that neither one had any danger in itself. Indeed with the other. It seems to have kept almost a uniform distance from without the base of its career; that is, after it struck the house first mentioned. Before that time it had been gradually dropping toward the earth, but after that it maintained substantially the same height all the way. This is very clear from the fact that in the low places, knots and nurseries through which it passed it scarcely touched anything, where as, when it came to a rise of ground, or a bit of any kind, its force was terrific.

The appearance of the country over which it passed is most extraordinary. There is what might be called a furrow about 300 feet wide, perfectly black, and having not a shed thing resting in it. That is, the turf was torn up and thrown either out of the track or forward some distance. The fences were taken bodily, excepting here and there a few posts. The latter were stripped perfectly bare. Most of the trees were torn up by the roots, except in a few cases where they were small. In these cases the insignificance of the object saved it. The blackness which characterizes this swath or furrow at 300 feet is due to the fact that the whole of the soil around about or of black loam after a few inches have been cut off.

All through the path of the wind, and for as much as a half a mile on each side, the ground is sprinkled with various kinds of sticks and lumber, and, curiously enough—a thing which cannot easily be explained—all these are stuck in the ground and are upright. One case see a fence-board and the lumber of a farm standing side by side upright and lookout at a field over which the storm passed dives one the idea that some one had gone over it and driven stakes in it. This appearance is found from the beginning to the end of the career of the cloud. The cloud made some curious discriminations which are hard to explain. For instance, at Braun's place it annihilated the house itself, and even went so far as to tear out the stone lining of the cellar. And yet, within five feet of that place, it left the floor of a kitchen and it took one of the beams out of the barn and brought it forward some 100 feet, throwing it down near where the house had stood, though the barn was some distance further on in the direction that the cloud was going. Again, it killed almost every living thing with which it came in contact, but made a curious exception of Braun's horses. It smashed up his hogs, and sheep, and poultry, but the horses were comparatively uninjured, and will recover. It is most remarkable to a person living here to see the path picked out by the cloud from the time it left Elgin until the time it disappeared. Its full force struck but one house, though others were somewhat affected. And yet it was almost impossible to pick out a straight line through the town without encountering at least a dozen residences. Probably a most ingenious man could not have laid down a path for such a tornado and had it strike only one house, as this one did. If it had veered to the right or left a hundred feet, it would have taken at least a dozen places.

Three persons were killed in this vicinity.

An Office-Seeker's Blunder.

A good story is told of Mr. Scranton, of Madison, the ex-President of the old Shore Line Railroad. In a train that was on the way to New London, a short time ago, Gov. Hubbard was a passenger. His Excellency sat quietly reading a newspaper. In a seat on the other side of the car, and at the rear of the Governor, sat our old friend Clark, of Chester, and Mr. S. H. Scranton, of Madison. The former, who had just been appointed Bank Commissioner, said to Mr. Scranton, with a slight flirt of the handkerchief in the intended direction, "That's Gov. Hubbard."

"Is it, indeed?" said Scranton; "I've been waiting to see him, and got acquainted with him; and I'll speak to him."

Whereupon Mr. S. quietly went three seats ahead and addressed Railroad Commissioner Arnold, of Hadlue:

"Good morning, Gov. Hubbard: I've been waiting to make your acquaintance; I am S. H. Scranton, of Madison."

Mr. Arnold stared, but bowed; and in his own friendly proceeded:

"The fact is, Governor, I'm about as much of a Democrat as a Republican; I vote to suit myself. I've been thinking, Governor, that I would like an appointment on the Railroad Commission, and if you can fill the next vacancy with my appointment I would feel much gratified."

Mr. Arnold bowed again.

"The fact is, Governor," his new acquaintance proceeded, "the truth is, the present Commission don't practically amount to much, especially Arnold. He ain't worth a row of pins. He just goes over the road, takes up a tie, here and there, glances at the bridge timbers, perhaps, and is off again. What does such an examination amount to? Now if I get his place I'll promise you there shall be real service rendered. I'm a practical railroad man."

Mr. Arnold, being now fully convinced of the real situation, blandly bowed again—as the part of bow of secondary agument—and said he'd think it over; and Mr. Scranton went back, well pleased with the prospect. It is said the story would never have got out but for the fun-enjoying Clark.—Hartford (Conn.) Times.

The "National Game."

For the next few months the American people will be frequently and forcibly reminded of the so-called "National game." Until the middle or latter part of June Congress will receive a share of attention, but after that there will be no reason why the public mind should not be wholly devoted to baseball. The forty or fifty young men who compose the "league clubs" should feel highly flattered at this state of things, and it is to be hoped will feel a due sense of responsibility as National representatives. It is quite true that in some respects they fall very short of representing the National intelligence, but in the matter of pitching, batting, catching, fielding, etc., they are undoubtedly pre-eminent, and will probably be the bright, particular models whom the youth of the land will spend their summer vacation in trying to imitate. There will be some broken limbs, a large number of disjointed fingers, and not a few fractured skulls, but these are insignificant compared with making progress in the National game. Base-ball, like other manias, is exclusive in its nature. Anything to be recognized as the National game it discourages all other ball games as irregular and illegitimate. Occupying the whole field, it leaves no room for others. In former years there was a variety of these, and if they were not played with as much science or jockeying as base-ball is played with now, they at least furnished jolly good sport to the youth of the last generation. Elder readers will easily recall some of these. There was the simple game of "two old cat," in which the ball passed back and forth between two pitchers and two strikers, the pitchers being also catchers. There was not much room for fine fielding or jockeying in this game, and we never heard of any pool-selling in connection with it; but it was an harmless, enjoyable old game for all that. "Three old cat" was the same game played on a triangle, the ball passing round and round, and all hands alternating at the bat, as they caught it or got caught out. Then there was "bull pen," in which there was no batting except on the body. The ball passed from hand to hand until it got hot, and then some fellow was "soaked" with it in a way he despised. "Rum around," or, it was sometimes called, base-ball, was the nucleus of the present game of that name. There were no regular "innings," but sides had to be chosen. This, after the leaders were selected, was generally done by toss of them tossing up a stick or ball-club, which the other caught, and then each one placed his doubled hand over that of the other, alternately, until the one who caught the end of the stick had first choice. If he could catch it by a very small end, but tight enough to throw it over his head, that was enough. The pitchers and catchers were selected by common consent or acclamation, and in that, as in other matters, universal suffrage did not always put the best men in office. Sometimes a lazy fellow who wanted to play, but did not like to run after balls, would set up a claim as pitcher, which would be recognized without much questioning. The playing was not very scientific, but it furnished good sport. The game could be learned without a teacher; there were no big salaries paid, no leagues, no admission fees, no ponies selling, but it was a brave old game, notwithstanding. There were other games of ball-ball, not to speak of foot-ball and hookey, or more popularly "shinny." These filled an important place in the sports of former years, but they are rooted out and displaced now by "the National game," with its complicated rules, its large and wonderful vocabulary, its high-salaried players, who make enough during the summer months to enjoy a whole winter of obscurity and idleness, and to umpires, captains, managers, etc. All this goes to prove that times change, and that we are a progressive people. The youth of the last generation thought they enjoyed their simple games, but they didn't. The right way for people to play ball is to hire a few muscular chaps to play for them, and then bet on the result.—Indianapolis Journal.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—The selection of a May Queen in Waco, Tex., was attended with considerable strife and excitement. Miss Jones received 8,124 votes, and Miss Pace, the next highest candidate, 4,312. The ballots cost ten cents each, and everybody could cast as many as desired by paying proportionately. The gain to a public charity by this plan was $1,200. There were several incidental fights, growing out of heated advocacy of the rival aspirants.

—A convicted thief in New Mexico aroused the imitative in all by loud cries. He was found lying on the floor of his cell, professedly unable to move. He said that he had fallen and his back and injured his spine. During the ensuing month he pretended to be in constant and terrible pain; and on his being carried to Court for sentence, the sympathetic Judge imposed the lightest possible penalty. Afterward it was discovered that the thief had not been hurt at all.

—A parrot created a sensation in a baggage-car on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad the other day. The cage was thrown into a corner and set on a collin and was soon forgotten. As the conductor and other trainmen were passing through the car they heard a sepulchral voice issuing apparently from the coffin, crying, "Lemme out!" They were startled and frightened, and thought they had a sure case of a ghost, till polly was discovered whining for liberty.

—There is now on trial in our courts a man possessed of a good trade, and capable of earning a decent living in any city or town in the country. Under the influence of liquor, a few weeks since, he attempted to knife a man to him unknown, and he will now pay for a few glasses of vile whisky by spending more or less time in the Penitentiary. Thursday's evening train brought to Denver another less fortunate victim. He, too, had been imposed upon by whisky, and, while under its influence drove the look of a gun through the brain of an antagonist, the manner of which he died. Here are two men—a would-be murderer and a murderer—whose proper places in court would be "Drunk, Your Honor."—Rocky Mountain News.

—Bryant Foley, a young Watertown man, who was suffering from a broken leg, in some way got the impression that he had taken poison in the form of carbolic acid, used as a wash for his limb, and died of fright. He was apparently well at four p. m. Sunday, and at seven p. m. he was dead. He ate an orange on Saturday, and thought it tasted of the acid, which caused him to faint, but he was quieted in a little while. The physicians say in their report to the Coroner: "We find, from a thorough examination and careful investigation, that his death was caused by syncope or fainting that we carefully examined the stomach and found no traces of poison of any kind; the coats of the stomach and intestines free from inflammation; from the appearance of the heart, it was evident from the absence of blood in its walls and their collapsed condition, that he died of syncope or faintness; the condition of his limb warranted the belief that his leg would be returned to usefulness, as all of the parts surrounding the fracture were in a healthy condition, and reparation of the bone already commenced and favorably prospering." The jury reported that it could not ascertain the cause of death.—Utica Herald.

AGRICULTURAL BREVITIES.

—The following are taken from the agricultural columns of the Iowa State Register:

Excessive watering is bad for geraniums.

Turkey eggs begin to pip the 26th day after setting.

When preparing soil for house plants, bake it, to destroy the worms.

Bear down hard on food crops, and raise all possible that will save buying or exchange.

Butter does not improve as cheese does by age, therefore the sooner it is sold the better.

Hard water becomes nearly soft by boiling. A piece of chalk will soften hard spring water.

A half-starved professional man or merchant is far less to be envied than a well-to-do farmer.

Nothing beautifies a house more than healthy house plants. To be healthy they must have proper care and attention.

Sulfas is a beautiful vine, invaluable for house or dress decoration, and should have a place among favorite house plants.

Fuschias prosper better by having charcoal in the bottom of the flower pot, and some rusty nails to supply the oxide of iron.

Cows pay in proportion as they are selected with care, fed with judgement, and their product of milk worked up with skill and nicety.

The sum is our sad dilemma: We are back to the time of our fathers in the price of what we have to sell, but in our expenses we are not.

Weeds are the farmers' most inveterate enemies. This season they will make an early and vigorous start. Resolve to let no weed escape.

There is no time on the farm now for visiting, lishing or idleness. Vigilance and energy are required to keep the weeds and grass in subjection in corn fields.

No matter how much self-denial it may take, we must cease expecting to live by our wits and get something for nothing—but we must get down to work.

There is no accidental wealth resulting from farming; the successful are the vigilant, and it often requires a little of intelligent industry to compass a competence.—Hon. Jas. Wilson.

Examination is said to reveal that many of the blinders worn by horses are so arranged that they strike the eyes of the animals with every step taken, causing blindness in many cases. A farmer who drifts into the year's work without any plan is like a General who starts out on a campaign without arrangements, or a lawyer going into court without preparation for his cases.

An exchange very truly says that nothing is gained by putting seed into the ground before it is warm enough to start the sprouts at once; but no farmer will lack for work to do while he is waiting for the ground to warm, since the ground ready is the main work of planting it is a small item.

Management of Chickens.

Chickens require neither food nor drink on the day on which they are hatched. Both are injurious, as they interfere with the natural digestion of the yelk, which is absorbed into the bowels at the period of hatching, and constitutes the first food. If grits, oatmeal and the like are spread before the hen on the twenty-first day, she is instructed to leave the nest, for then the chickens are unable to follow, and they feed weakly, frequently perish. If unfettered, the hen seldom leaves the nest on the twenty-first day, while on the twenty-second day the chickens will be found strong enough to follow her. The plan of cramming pepper-corns or grains of barley down the throats of newly-hatched chickens is exceedingly injudicious. The best food for these is sweet, coarse oatmeal, mixed into a crumbly paste with milk, and a certain proportion of custard made by beating together an egg with two tablespoonfuls of milk, and "setting" it in a gentle heat. Custard so made is called with acidity, and the chicken make rapid progress upon it. Such a preparation is far superior to the hardboiled egg so often employed, and which is not relished by the chicken. The young birds are also very fond of a little cold oatmeal porridge, milk is frequently used to mix the barley or oatmeal, but it should be remembered that it soon becomes sour in summer, and is decidedly injurious if employed in that state. No more food, therefore, should be mixed with milk than can be eaten in a few hours. Sopped bread is by no means desirable, since it does not appear to afford the necessary resistance to the natural grinding of the gizzard, and consequently the chickens soon become weakly and affected with diarrhea from its use. In order to satisfy the hunger of the hen, which is usually very great when she leaves the nest, it is quite desirable to give her as much grain as she can consume. Then, having satisfied her own appetite, and quenched her thirst, which at this time is considerable, she will brood over her unfledged young and keep them at rest, whilst they are digesting the yelk that has been absorbed just before hatching. After the first few days some whole grain, such as small tail wheat, or some barley, may be given to the young brood, and it will be found to be greatly relished, and doubtless affords a wholesome exercise for the extraordinary grinding power of the gizzard. Chickens should either have a constant supply of food, or be fed at very short intervals. The first food should be given at daybreak. With regard to animal food there is none equal to the natural supply of worms and insects obtained by the hen when she is at large; small worms or a shovelful of mold, containing an ants' nest, may be given, if chickens are in a confined situation, and will be found far superior to boiled egg, chopped meat, or any other artificial substitute. Cooping, which is frequently employed to prevent the wandering of hens wi'h chickens, is not desirable, and though in many cases it is unnecessary, yet not the less an evil.—American Cultivator.

Plant Cultivation.

In order to obtain good plants, especially those for the vegetable garden, it is absolutely essential to raise them from seed, for those offered for sale in the markets are grown for sale and are neither healthy nor robust. If, however, there are no facilities for seed propagation and the purchase of plants becomes unavoidable, the following instructions will be found valuable.

Select those that have short, robust stems, for a long or slender stem indicates that the plants have been rapidly forced, and a poor root, or were grown too close together. Which cause the sides and undergrowth have been excluded from the light and air, and the plant is, as it were, stretched their necks in their efforts to reach the light. If a plant has a small amount of root in proportion to the foliage, it is weakly from having been forced too quickly or under too great a heat. The more root, the stronger and the greater the growing capacity of the plant. If the leaves are of a yellow ensat, it may occur from an unhealthy condition of the soil, or probably, from having been but recently taken from the hotbed or forcing-house, from which they have come. Under the plant-bed too long, and, in some cases, from there being insects or grubs at the root. If the roots are very short, it shows that they have been carelessly taken from the beds and the rootlets have been broken off. A short or stubby root is also detrimental to the plant, while if the root is long and fibrous it is of little consequence if the foliage is small or yellow, providing that it has a deep-green, vigorous appearance.

The object of transplanting is to check the growth of the foliage and promote that of the root, and this is best done while the plants are young, so that, when they are finally planted out, there will be sufficient root to support a vigorous upper growth. As soon as the plants are well above the surface of the soil they should be thinned out; that is, the weaker ones should be removed, so that those left may have free access to the air and not be crowded. In thinning out, hand the weakest and strongest plants, keeping them as nearly as possible an equal distance apart and with a small space between the leaves of one plant and those of the next. As soon as the plants have six visible leaves they first transplanting (called the pricking out) should be performed. First the seed bed should be well watered, and an hour afterward the plants should be removed to another bed, prepared of rich, light soil. In removing the plants from the old bed it is of great consequence to preserve the rootlets, and to this end a three or four pronged fork should be employed, lifting the plants gently and handling them carefully, planting them separately to the leaves in the new bed, placing those three or four inches apart, and pressing the earth very lightly about them, and finally lightly sprinkling them with water. The bed in which they are transplanted should be prepared rather dry, and if out of doors just before a shower of rain is the best time. Plants that have been thus transplanted not only grow to greater perfection, but are more hardy and will stand a protracted drought much better.—Scientific American.

—Modern case of Roman father, etc: Officer Patrick Burns, of New York, ran in his own and only son, Dennis, for being drunk, saying that he would also complain against his offspring for stealing his mother's silver pitcher and pawning it so as to get to the spree. Dennis, the paternal heart relented, and the boy would have got off, but for the Justice, who held him in bail and the father as a witness.

A SUGGESTION of the beef-producing resources of the Argentine Republic and Uruguay, is given in the casual remark of a London newspaper—that 50,000 ox-tongues constituted a part of the cargo brought by the steamer Mondego from the River Plata to Southampton, on the other day. The hides, it seems, also largely cross the Atlantic from the Rio de la Plata, while the chief part of the flesh is sold in Brazil.

"WHAT can you do on a farm?" inquired a farmer of a man who wanted work. "Do you know how to build a stone wall?" "Oh! yes. Any fool knows that. You just have to set one stone on another." "No, you don't!" thundered the farmer. "You have to set one stone on two. You can go."

AT this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the unsufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks, or protracted fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy, SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

Simmons' Liver Regulator has been in use for half a century and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time, according to the directions. It is without doubt the greatest Liver Medicine in the world; in perfect success, being composed entirely compounded from pure roots and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substances. It takes the place of quinine and calomel, and has superseded those medicines in places where they have heretofore been extensively used. Try it; one a bottle at once from your druggist, do not delay; give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result gained.

CAUTION!

As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no powders or prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, unless in our unbroken wrapper, with Trade Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, June 14, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

After a loud and somewhat inglorious existence of six months, Stewart's mammoth Women's Hotel is no more. The place had been losing $200 a day from its commencement, beside the interest on nearly $4,000,000 and it has been thought time to stop such an ear ailing leak in Stewart's estate. Of course the failure of such a gigantic experiment would have been in itself an occurrence of considerable importance but even that by itself would never have raised such a breeze as has followed thitherto for Judge Hilton, the Mephistopheles of the Stewart property, as he is sometimes regarded, gave out in closing the establishment that he had to do it because women wouldn't live where men could n't come. That settled it. The restrictions and high prices of the hotel while in operation had rendered the Judge quite unpopular, and now arose a shriek from the sisterhood, some echo of which must, I think, already reached your readers' ears. The fair sex, or that section thereof to whom this enterprise particularly appealed, rose up as one woman and indignantly repelled this base accusation. They want the society of men! They care anything about silk hats and mustaches! The idea of insinuating such a thing! They must vindicate their freedom from such a weakness or die in the attempt. So they issued a call for a mass meeting, and packed the big hall of Cooper Union to suffocation. They made speeches and sang songs and resolutions and poetry, and called the Hiltonians millionaire all the names in the dictionary, and finally circulated for signatures, a pledge not to buy a dollar's worth of dry goods of such a monster within the next five years. Then they stopped and panted for breath fully expecting, I suppose, that Judge Hilton would pull up stakes and fly the country by next train.

Instead of this, he has gone hurriedly to work made some alterations in the big building, put up in such masculine conveniences as a bar, billiard room, barber shop, &c., and rechristening the place the "Park Avenue Hotel" will shortly open it to the public as a commercial hotel. Time will now tell how wise a move has been made in this change. It certainly cannot be worse pecuniarily than the first months have been.

It would seem as though this experiment settled the question of cheap exclusive hotel accommodations for working women. The friends of the idea however claim the contrary. They claim that Judge Hilton has always been opposed to the scheme and has done all he could under the circumstances to ensure its failure. While this is probably not true it can hardly be doubted that had he given it his hearty support it would not have so entirely "fizzled" as in this instance.

After half a dozen false starts and postponements, the new elevated road —or "yellow-eared road" as the punsters call it on account of the color which the iron work has been painted—was opened for travel on Wednesday the 5th and has since been doing the rushing business which public curiosity and convenience had foreordained for it. On this day too the name of the route was changed from the "Gilbert" to the "Metropolitan." The first train was a special one carrying the president of the company, Geo. M. Pullman of sleeping car fame, up and down the line. Later in the day Mr. Pullman sailed for Europe. Late in the afternoon the road had its initial accident resulting from a misplaced switch. An engine was thrown from the rails but remained on the ties and no material injury was done. The next day another casualty was reported, a train running into a team who was carelessly standing on the track, and throwing him to the pavement twenty feet below. It is to be hoped that they are not going to keep up this average of accidents, one a day, and indeed it is probable that they will exercise so much extra care in future that there is really little danger of a repetition of even these slight mishaps.

The cars on the new route are roomy and elegant within, and of very graceful and finished external appearance. The engines or "dummies" are made to resemble a small car and are all painted a light yellowish green color. The trains are nearly noiseless, and run at a high rate of speed, thirty miles an hour having been several times attained. During most of the day the line is ten cents, but on what are called "commissioners trains," which are run for the benefit of the working class during two morning and two evening hours, the rate is only five cents. The elevated system is proving a magnificent public convenience and success, and when the East side routes are opened there will have to be an end of all these "rapid transit" jokes which for years have been cracked all over the country at New York's expense.

I am afraid that Mr. James Gordon Bennett has an undue love for personal as well as journalistic sensations. One might think that his duel with Fred May had received public attention enough to suit even him; but it seems not. He is now out in a long card (cabled over from Paris) reviving the subject, defending his course and his courage, and hinting at mysterious revelations that ought to settle concerning the affair. If he is not careful the astonishing outdoor city poetry of Africa and the North Pole will find himself and his personal doings as much of a public nuisance as the Reader-Tilton affair.

The annual parade of the New York police force took place this week, and was really a good deal of a display. They turned out 1,900 strong, and in drill, uniform and general appearance were above the average of many a crack regiment. This annual parade is not only an interesting sight to the public but I think a very healthy spectacle to present occasionally before the eyes of the thousands of roughs, burglars and communists that infest the city. Such a body as this would make short work of any ordinary riot.

Apropos of the recent atrocious attempt to murder Emperor William of Germany, it may be interesting to know something of the frequency of attempts at regicide. Within thirty years, the number of such attempts, successful and unsuccessful, has been twenty-eight including the assassination of President Lincoln. In one case, that of Napoleon III, the attacks on his life were no less than five in number, not with standing which he died peacefully in his bed after all.

Local summer travel is fairly under way for the season. The mound will be as always a favorite highway for but weather journeying especially as the Fall River line has those two matchless steamers, the Bristol and Providence running regularly again, from their renovation in better quarters. The Fall River is the route to the East.

RADIX.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the Liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequaled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. For sale by Geo. W. Crozier.

The Origin of Obeisances.

Speaking of a party of Shoshones surprised by them, Lewis and Clarke say: "The other two, an elderly woman and a little girl, seeing we were too near for them to escape, sat on the ground, and, holding down their heads seemed as if resuscitated to the death which they supposed awaited them. The same habit of holding down the head and inviting the enemy to strike when all chance of escape is gone, is preserved in Egypt to this day." Here we are shown an effort to propitiate by absolute submission; and from acts so prompted originate obeisances.

When, at the outset, in illustration of the truth that ceremony precedes not only social evolution but even human evolution, I named the behavior of a small dog which throws itself on its back in presence of an alarming great dog, probably many readers thought I was putting on this behavior a somewhat forced construction. They would not have thought so had they known that a parallel mode of behavior occurs among human beings. Describing the Rateka salutation, Livingstone says: "They throw themselves on their backs on the ground, and, rolling from side to side, slap the outside of their thighs as expressions of thankfulness and welcome." Neither or not consciously adopted for this reason, the assumption of this attitude, which implies, "You need not subdue me, I am subdued already," has the same means of obtaining safety. Resistance generates antagonism and arouses the destructive instincts. The stronger animal or the stronger man becomes less dangerous when the weaker animal or man passively succumbs; because nothing occurs to excite the passion for victory. Hence, then, the natural genesis of this obeisance by prostration on the back, which, perhaps, more than any other position, makes self-defense impracticable. I say perhaps, because another attitude may be instanced in which the helpless, which more elaborately displays complete submission. "At Tonga Tabu . . . the common people show their great . . . respect by prostrating themselves before him, and by putting his feet on their necks." The like occurs in Africa. Laird says the messengers from the King of Fundah "each lent down and put my foot on their heads, and threw dust over themselves." And among ancient historic peoples this position, originated by defeat in battle, became the position assumed in acknowledgment of submission. —Herbert Spencer, in Popular Science Monthly.

THE LONG AGO.

Beverly Smith walked out of cell No. 6 with the greatest promptness, and as he ranged up before the desk and smiled, he said:

"Well, this is indeed a surprise! Why, I hadn't the remotest idea of finding you here! Shake, old fellow!"

His Honor wouldn't.

"You remember your old schoolmate, Bev Smith?" inquired the prisoner. "Don't you remember how we used to steal melons together—how we both went over the mill-dam in an old boat—how we read novels under the side of haystacks?"

A strange light crept into His Honor's eyes as he replied:

"Ah! I remember you now! So you are Bev Smith?"

"I am—I am. I thought you'd remember me. I'm awful glad to see you, Judge. Are you well?"

"Quite well, thank you."

An awkward silence followed. Mr. Smith heard the boys chuckling, and he at length said:

"Glad to hear it—yes—yes. I should like to call on you and talk o'er old times."

"Beverly Smith!" said the Court, in a voice resembling the distant explosion of a coal cart, "you are now about to call on the Superintendent of the House of Correction, there to remain for ninety long days."

"What! Sentence an old companion?"

"All the same, Beverly—all the same. The friends of my childhood are few in number. They are falling down stairs, being drowned, blown up and run over, and I'm going to put you where you will be safe from accident."

"Don't, Judge!"

"But I will! I prize you, Beverly. When night comes I want to know that you are in out of the wet, and when morning dawns I want to feel safe that you are safe from the clutch of ice wagons. The sentence is recorded."

"Judge, I—I—don't think I ever knew you!" stammered Beverly, but there was a light in the window for him.

BIG FOOD THEORY.

Frank Longstreet went into a saloon on Gratiot avenue, picked up a twenty-five-pound chunk of ice, and was walking away when arrested. He had a sulky, obstinate look on his face as he was brought before the bar, and he looked up at the clock and growled:

"I'm in a hurry to get away from here!"

"One great cause of the increased ratio of mortality in this country," slowly replied His Honor, as he leaned back and felt for another lie, "is haste and impatience. You have twenty-four hours in a day, and seven days in a week, Mr. Longstreet, and there's no need of haste in your case. Be calm, prisoner."

"I won't keep still—I won't be calm!" exclaimed the man.

"Oh, yes, you will. I've been looking you over, and I know you will. What made you take that ice?"

"It was mine as much as his—that's why."

"Explain yourself."

"Didn't Nature make water, your Honor."

"She did."

"And is ice anything but frozen water?"

"It is not."

"Well, but water called man's free beverage?"

"It is, Mr. Longstreet; your theory is perfectly correct. You burn wood in your house; Nature made wood. The forests were here before we were, therefore anyone can drive up and cart off your woodpile. If your theory is a good one so is mine."

The man scrutched his ear, pondered deeply, and taking three dollars from his vest pocket he placed the money on the desk and whispered: "Call it squared. I'm a consarned fool and you are——"

If he meant "ditto" he didn't say so.—Detroit Free Press.

A Snake Den in Kansas.

Being in Concordia last Sunday, and having had my curiosity aroused several times during the last two years by what appeared to be extravagant reports of a den of snakes at some place south of Concordia, I availed myself of an invitation to substantiate the story. The first thing that attracted our attention after hitching our horses was the almost unbearable stench which invaded our nostrils, and which we soon found was caused by two enormous pyramids of dead snakes. Such a sight as met our gaze was the first of this kind in our experience, and was one that we can hardly expect to repeat. Snakes from fifteen inches to three and a half feet lay there coiled, straight, interwined, massed and matted together, a huge pile of dead and decaying snake flesh. Not all were dead, for here and there among the pile might be seen some slightly moving and quivering, showing that they were among those which had been consigned to the increasing pile that day.

The den itself is in a high rocky knoll or bluff. The knoll is a magnesian limestone formation of a very loose porous character. About fifteen or twenty cubic yards of earth and rock had been excavated, and on each side of this hole near the bottom was a ledge of rocks beneath which an excavation appears to have been made either naturally or by some wild animal forming a narrow cage which may penetrate into the inmost recesses of this mound. In this excavation were several young men, one of whom especially attracted our attention as, with a pair of heavy buckskin gloves, he would incessantly be upon the watch, and now and then, reaching into the cavern as far as he could reach or get his body in, he would pull therefrom with his hands a large snake. Hundreds must have been killed in this way as we were certainly too many while we were there to keep any accurate count, and being not a very warm day it was not a good day for snakes either. The den was discovered two years ago by a boy who called a Mr. Graves to the spot. He says that the ground was literally alive with them, and that he succeeded in killing three hundred in about half an hour. He said that to his knowledge almost 5,000 had already been killed at that spot; and it was proposed on Sunday next to call the neighbors together for several miles around and have a "snake bee" and a general extermination day, for which they would come prepared with materials and tools to insure success by exsanvitiae if necessary.

I will only add that the snakes appear to be of the racer species, not, however, the species of blue racer so common to Illinois, and not of a venomous nature. However, they show some fight when they get warmed up, and strike at an approaching object promiscuously.—Atchison (Kan.) Champion.

Type-Setting in Japan.

The advantages of alphabetic writing are nowhere more conspicuously shown than in a large printing office. The compositor stands within easy reach of every character he may have need of, and a boy can learn the position of each in the case in a few hours. It is quite another matter where each word has a distinct character, as in China and Japan. A correspondent describing the office of a Japanese paper says that a full font of Japanese type comprises 50,000 characters, of which 3,000 are in constant use, and for 2,000 more there are frequent calls. The type is disposed about the compositing room on racks, like those in a reading room, and the compositors wander up and down the aisles setting type and taking exercise at once. With so many characters it is no wonder that Japanese proof readers have to be men of intelligence and high scholarship.

The impossibility of telegraphing single-character words has kept this great instrument of civilization in foreign hands, and made it practically useless for the natives of China and Japan. To those the telephone is an especial blessing, which they are not slow to appreciate.—Scientific American.

"I SHOULDN'T think there would be such a word as 'breakfast,'" remarked a young Bagnist to his mother, the other morning. "Why not, dear?" asked she. "Because, ma," replied the boy, "it isn't natural; things never break fast—they break loose."

The Mound-Builders.

The announcement that a rare bird, one of the curious Mound-Builders (Megapodius Pritchardii) is on exhibition for a short time at the Central Park Menagerie, New York, furnishes the occasion for laying before our readers a few facts connected with its history. The Megapodius is a small family of birds included in the order Gallinæ, and are found only in Australia, New Guinea and the islands in adjacent waters, extending as far as the Philippines and Northwest Borneo. While Mr. Wallace was studying the fauna of the Malay Archipelago, he first met with one of the species (Megapodius Gouldii), on the island of Lombeah. In alluding to the family, he states that "They are all characterized by very large feet, and long, curved claws, and most of the species * * * rake and scratch together all kinds of rubbish, dead leaves, sticks, stones, earth, rotten wood, etc., till they form a large mound, often six feet high, and twelve feet across, in the middle of which they bury their eggs. The natives can tell by the condition of these mounds whether they contain eggs or not; and they rob them whenever they can, as the brick-red eggs (as large as those of a swan) are considered a great delicacy. A number of birds are said to join in making these mounds, and by their eggs together, so that sometimes forty or fifty may be found. The mounds are to be met with here and there in dense thickets, and are great puzzles to strangers, who cannot understand who can possibly have heaped together cartloads of rubbish in such out-of-the-way places; and, when they inquire of the natives, they are but little the wiser, for it almost always appears to them the wildest romance to be told that it is all done by birds. The species found in Lombeah is about the size of a small hen, and entirely of dark olive and brown tints. It is a miscellaneous feeder, devouring fallen fruits, earthworms, snails and, sometimes, even the flesh is white and well-flavored when properly cooked."

The Megapodii are abundant in the Moluccas Islands, and most of the species visit the scrubby jungles along the seashore, where the soil is sandy, and there collect a wonderful supply of the sticks, sea-weeds, leaves, etc., of which they build their nests or mounds. Mr. Wallace became well acquainted with the habits of the birds during his stay in the Moluccas, and added to his first account of them some fresh observations. He found that their mounds were often from six to eight feet high, and from twenty to thirty feet in diameter. The eggs are enabled to build these mounds, he remarks, "with comparative ease, by means of their large feet, with which they can grasp and throw backward a quantity of material at each stroke. In this mound, at a depth of two or three feet, the eggs are deposited, and are hatched by the gentle heat produced by the fermentation of the vegetable matter of the mound."

Mr. Wallace once or twice came upon the birds while they were building their mound, and says: "They run a few steps backward, grasping a quantity of loose material in one foot, and throw it a long way behind them. When once properly buried, the eggs seem to be no more cared for—the young birds working their way up through the heap of rubbish, and running off at once into the forest. They come out of the egg covered with thick, downy feathers, and have no tail, although the wings are fully developed."

Mr. Wallace was himself the discoverer of new species, named in his honor M. Wallacei. It inhabits the islands of Gilolo, Ternate and Bouru, and is said by him to be the handsomest bird of the genus, being richly banded with reddish-brown on the back and wings. It also differs from the other species in its habits—dwelling in the forests of the interior, and coming to the seabeach to deposit its eggs. Instead of making a mound, the M. Wallacei burrows into the sand to the depth of about three feet obliquely downward, and deposits its eggs at the bottom. It then busily comes up to the mouth of the hole, and is said by the natives to obliterate and disguise its own footmarks leading to and from the hole, by making many other tracks and scratches in the neighborhood. It lays its eggs only at night; and at Bouru a bird was caught early one morning as it was coming out of its hole, in which several eggs were found. All these birds seem to be semi-nocturnal, for their loud, wailing cries may be constantly heard late into the night and long before daybreak in the morning. The eggs are all of a rusty-red color, and very large for the size of the bird, being generally three or three and a quarter inches long by two or two and a quarter wide."

The species of Mound-Builder which is now at the Central Park, New York, is of a blackish-brown color, with the upper part of the neck a vermilion-red, and its length from bill to end of tail is about fourteen inches. In Harper's Forest and Stream that this M. Pritchardii digs a hollow in the ground, be tween one and two feet in depth, and there lays about forty eggs, in the months of September and October. The observations of Mr. Mottley, who has visited the haunts of this bird, regarding the period of incubation, are as follows: "Some eggs that had been buried in the sand for six weeks were found to contain merely the embryo of a chick, as much advanced as a hen's egg hatched four days." Mr. Mottley buried some eggs that had been brought to him, in the sand to the depth of about three feet, and in three weeks' time a young bird emerged, shook itself free of sand and ran away so fast that it was caught with difficulty. From the first it provided for itself, scratching up the earth like an old bird. In describing the Megapodius, Mr. Gill graphically remarks that "It reminds one of a hen that has lost her tail."—Chicago Tribune.

The Most Useful Animal.

It would seem to be about time for that class of theorists who proclaim that "the horse is the most useful of all animals, and also the most intelligent," to look into the merits of the statement somewhat. The quotation is neither new nor original. On the contrary, it is very old, so old that it is worn threadbare. The fact is, the horse is neither the most useful nor the most intelligent animal. Horned cattle far surpass horses in usefulness, and the elephant is the superior of the horse in intelligence. With the intelligent sagacity—chief of the statement, however, we do not now propose to deal. Let us see how horses, as a class, compare with cattle in point of utility.

Suppose one or the other race were destroyed. If the horse, then the ox would have to take his place as a draught animal, and it would be found to be no mean one. It is true our roads would not be filled with fast trotting horses, driving just about half CLIFFORD HAS AN INDIAN FRIEND.—Our readers will be interested in hearing from their old friend Captain Clifford, who is at his post out West, guarding the frontier. The Rocky Mountain Husbandman gives the particulars of a raid made by a party of Indians upon the country adjacent to Camp Baker, and of its repulse by a squad of soldiers under Capt. Clifford. The fight was short but fierce; two Indians were killed, and Capt. Clifford was grazed by two bullets. The dispatch says: "As Messenger Spaulding came in he met Capt. Clifford's horse, with saddle and bridle, going toward the post, and fears are entertained lest the brave officer has fallen. A man at Watson's who saw Clifford's horse pass said it was wounded. The firing was heard at Watson's. Clifford's party numbered only six soldiers and four citizens. Nine Indians were seen; the entire number is not known." A later dispatch announces Clifford's safety, and closes as follows: "Thus the bravery and energy of Capt Clifford and his followers defeated the plans of the Indians, sent one or more to the happy hunting grounds, and caused the others to flee the country." Capt. Clifford, in a letter to his brother here, states that one bullet grazed his lips, and another passed so close to his eyes as to make the tears come, "probably," the Captain adds, humorously, "for my past misdeeds." In a letter to the editor of this paper the Captain expresses the belief that they will have more sharp fighting, soon, and promises to write us the particulars.

THE BRIDGE.—Below this paper receives all its readers the new iron bridge across Pine River at this place will be completed, and in use. The bridge and pier rests upon fifty lines wood piles, driven closely, and cut off two feet below low water mark. The pier upon which the turn-table rests consists of a central sectional tube of boiler iron, sixteen feet in hight, and four feet in diameter, surrounded by ten smaller tubes of the same material. These are filled with concrete and capped, and are braced in the strongest manner. Upon this rest the turn-table, which is a masterpiece of strength and easy movement. The bridge proper is constructed principally of wrought iron truss work, substantially riveted, and strongly braced. At the center, on either side, rise wrought iron posts to a height of twenty feet, and from the top of these to each extreme corner of the bridge are two rods, each 2 inches in diameter. The extreme length of the bridge is 127 feet, and the width of the road way 16 feet. On either side outside the truss work are side walks three feet wide, with a railing three feet high. The bridge has a capacity of sustaining twenty tons. A small boy will be able to swing it with the greatest ease. The Smith Bridge Company, of Toledo, Ohio, are the builders, and their work has been well done. Their reputation is richly deserved if their manner of doing work elsewhere is the same as has characterized their operations here.

At the State Band Tournament in Lansing last week, Gardner's Flint city band won the first prize: Central City Band, of Jackson, second prize; Peninsular Commandery Band, of Kalamazoo, 3d prize; Evart Cornet Band, of Evart, 4th prize; Union Cornet Band, of Ionia, 5th prize. Louis Ross, leader of the Central City Band, of Jackson, won the first prize in the cornet solo contest, and Miss Anna T. Berger, of the Berger Ball Ringer troupe, the second prize.

The New York Tribune asks a pertinent question: "Was the Democratic party sincere when it promised to leave this question to the Electoral Commission? Or was it only lying to gain time? Send this question to the Commission,' the resolutionists seem to have said; 'if it decides for us, all right; if it decides against us, we will refuse to pay.' That is the conduct of bullies and swindlers."

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, nonsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you,—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of Liver Complaint, or Dyspepsia with all its miserable effects such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents. Three doses will relieve you.

Season closes Friday for a two months' vacation.

The grading of the hill leading the Fountain City House, is in progress.

The Ladies' Aid Society are preparing to provide luxuries for the public on the Fourth.

Hon. John Nicholls will commence moving into his new residence this week.

For fire crackers go to See & Washburn's.

The steamer Clara Bell is to make an excursion from Northport to the head of South Arm, on the Fourth.

James Reed, in the Township of Eveline, this county, has barley standing eight feet high in the field, and some of it bearing two heads to a stalk.

A Mackinaw gentleman is negotiating for the purchase of a lot on Bridge street in this village, upon which he proposes to erect a grocery and bakery the coming fall.

A fine stock of ladies' linen dusters, Fox, Rose & Butters.

The new bridge has been entirely completed, and was turned over to the Committee to day. Work on the approaches is in progress, and full freedom of passage for both teams and pedestrians will be given to-morrow or next day.

Sedan is the name of a new Post Office just established in the Chadlock neighborhood, on the east side of South Arm. Fred. Goodman is Postmaster.

Boy Lost and Found.—A young boy living with O. D. Hilton, in Norwood Township, started out one afternoon last week to hunt cows, and lost himself. He wandered about until next day at ten o'clock, when, by the united efforts of the people of the neighborhood, he was found, near Little Island, in an exhausted condition, having been exposed during the night to a cold drenching rain.

The Farmers' Union Litterary and Agricultural Society, of Springvale, in this County, prospers and is destined to still prosper, if the present interest manifested is an indication. Their meetings are held for the discussion of topics which vitally interest farmers, and many sound ideas are brought out. Their last meeting held on June 9th, was one of unusual interest and profit.

A. K. Dougherty has instituted Encampment No 2, of the Independent Order of Moss backs, at Elk Rapids, and they are to parade at that place on the fourth. The Elk Rapids folks are conquering with us in their preparations for the Fourth, and their bills promise a big treat in all the various exercises. Hon. F. R. Williams is to be the orator.

Any one burdened with silver can exchange it at Carpenter & Bartholomew's for goods at cash prices

An extraordinary opening exists at Charlevoix for the erection of a flouring mill. Parties here stand ready to take an interest to the extent of the building and the steam power. An investigation will show that this is one of the best openings for an enterprise of this kind that can be found in the State.

Crops are reported as never looking better. From all directions in this region come tidings of satisfaction among our farmers, and the promise of an abundant harvest.

The Band Excursion on Tuesday was an enjoyable affair. The families of the band members all participated, and many others went along. At the head of Pine Lake we called at the cosy little store of James H. Thompson, and he and his accommodating lady have our thanks for favors extended.

Personal.—A. J. Beardsley and family returned to their home at the head of Pine Lake, on Saturday.

—A. B. Turner and his son-in-law, S. S. Milmine, both of Grand Rapids, are up the Jordan fishing.

Marine.—The tug H. W. Minter, of Saugatuck, arrived here on Tuesday and her owners propose to keep her here to do towing. She is 60 feet long, draws six feet of water, and has a powerful engine for a boat of her size. She is commanded by Capt. A. H. Coates, a tug master of experience.

—Capt. Gwynn, of the schooner Lillie Pratt, well known here, died at Chicago, on the day last week.

—Since opposition in tugging came, the Charlevoix tugs go outside and watch for vessels, in true Chicago style.

The steamer Van Buskirk has left the bay route, having made her last trip Saturday, and entered into a contract with the railroad Company to run between Petoskey and Mackinac. The cause of this change is the "thin picking" on the bay since Hannah Lay & Co. put their boat, the Clara Belle, upon both arms of the bay. Very little time will elapse, however, before a boat will take her place, at least between Petoskey and Northport, as Dexter & Noble, in conjunction with the railroad Company, are working for this end. A smaller boat than the Van Buskirk can find a good route here.

A lover said "Ameith my dear, for thee I'd gather the stars one by one as they fall from the regions of ethereal space, I'd pluck the sun, that oriental god of day, I'd turn him from the sky and quench his effulgence in the fountain of my love for thee." "Oh don't," said she, "for if you do we shall have to use Smith's Saleratus to make things light." Remember and use only 7-8 as much as of any other and your biscuits will always be sweet and spongy.

Beaver Island Correspondence.

St. James, Mich., June 20, 1878.

Ed. Charlevoix Sentinel.

Dear Sir.—Thinking a few lines might be acceptable to the many readers of your truly interesting and newsy paper, I send them to you. This people of Beaver Island are all very busy either in farming or fishing. Owing to there being no snow here last winter nothing was done in the wood business, and all the inhabitants improved the time in clearing up lands, the consequence being that there is at least three times the amount of land in crops.

This week we had a term of Circuit Court for Manitou County. Hon. D. Goodwin, Circuit Judge being present, E. H. Green, of Charlevoix, L. J. Pailthorp, of Petoskey, and a Mr. Bell, of Chicago, were the attorneys in attendance. These gentlemen together with the Jurymen, witnesses and parties interested, made St. James appear quite lively for a few days. The case of the people against Chas. C. Haden, one of the owners of the schooner "Ebenezer," attracted the most attention. It was an appeal from Justice Bailey's Court where he was found guilty of throwing fish offal into Lake Michigan, and fined $25 and cost. The jury in the Circuit Court found him guilty. He moved for a new trial, which was granted. This prosecution has had a good effect, as all parties are more particular to comply with the law than formerly. The cause of the people against Maley and Burk was settled between the parties interested and the Prosecuting Attorney entered a nol. pros. The civil cases were tried by the Court and, as I understand, were referred to C. H. Wright, James Donlevy and John Day, jr., as referees.

The Gibson House was headquarters for the legal gentlemen present, several of whom I heard say that they could not be persuaded to stop at any other house, it being superior to the hotels at Mackinac.

In truth, I cannot see how any one could do more to make strangers feel at home than Mrs Gibson. We have the propellers Badger State, Tuscola, Canisteo and Menominee stopping here regularly, thus giving a fine opportunity to get out an in.

Yours Truly,
PATMOS.

The Fourth at Charlevoix.—The details are all arranged for an old fashioned, rousing good time at Charlevoix on the Fourth. Rev. H. P. Blake, of Norwood, has been engaged to deliver an oration, and the usual display of the fantastic will take place upon the streets in the afternoon. Games, races, and other contests are to be encouraged by prizes, and music, procession and lemonade will do their part. The steamer Gazelle will go up the lake the evening before the Fourth, and bring down those who wish to come from either the lake or arm, arriving here at 9 o'clock the morning of the Fourth. It will be a good opportunity for the people round about to come to town, get a ride upon the new steamer, see the new bridge, and have a regular old-fashioned good time. Let Charlevoix be well filled on the Fourth.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

A BILL was introduced and referred in the Senate, on the 6th, to encourage and aid the higher education of the colored race in the District of Columbia and in the several States. The Pacific Railroad bill was taken up and debated. Several amendments to the Pacific Railroad bill were agreed to. Among them being one restoring the "cooling privilege" to the extent of allowing members of Congress, etc., to send free through the mail such written and printed communications and extending two and a half ounces in weight to the limit of privilege. The amendment was passed—if to it Mr. Matthews made a personal explanation in which he said he had understood (that he was in no way connected, by partisanship or encouragement, with the publication of alleged frauds in the last Presidential election in Louisiana, he stated that Anderson had applied to him for official advantage on the ground that he (Anderson) had rendered valuable, faithful and efficient service in exposing the publicist cause in Louisiana, at a sacrifice of time and money, and at great personal risk, the only error (if there be one) of which he (Matthews) was conscious, was in having prevailed upon to office a person who had meditated and prepared a wrong, but had not in fact acted on the question of Privileges and Elections. The bill to strengthen the foundation of the Washington Monument was passed. Bills (as to Ellis, White and Jones (Fla.), were and other correspondence from session on the Matthews Special Committee, and the vote granting their respond to be examined was subsequently reconsidered. Several amendments to the Army Appropriation bill were agreed to. A Conference Committee was appointed on the Army Appropriation bill. ... A bill was introduced and referred in the House, for the relief of the Indian citizens, for the prompt settlement of the public lands, and for the better protection of the rights of Indians depredations. The Senate amendments to the Army Appropriation bill were concurred in, and a Conference Committee was appointed. The Civil Service Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole. At the evening session bills were passed relating to all reversionary claim and interest of the United States in certain lands granted to the State of Michigan by the act of June 3, 1856; directing suit to be brought in the name of the United States to set aside patents issued for any of the lands of the Black Hawk land grants to the Sioux Indians in that State, and to test the question of the validity of the settlers' claims of fraud and impairment, the law providing that soldiers and sailors honorably discharged by reason of disabilities resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they possess the requisite capacity, with the understanding that the history service will be not to extend any soldier entitled in the line of duty and honorably discharged, or the widows or daughters of killed or disabled soldiers.

DOMESTIC.

MR. MOENCH, living near Dixon, Mo., on his return from the village, the other day, missed his two little girls, aged eight and five years, respectively. His attention was called to a large trunk in the room, and he opened it and found the litteles forms of the little ones. They were past resuscitation. It is supposed they jumped in the trunk, intending to give their father a pleasant surprise, but were overcome by the heat and lack of air.

THE International Typographical Union, at its late session, in Detroit, elected the following officers: President, John Armstrong, of Toronto, Can.; Vice-Presidents, Otis B. Martin, of Chicago, and T. J. Vaughn, of Richmond, Va.; Secretary and Treasurer, William White, of New York; Corresponding Secretary, Charles Wright, of Cincinnati. Washington was selected as the place for holding the next annual meeting.

ACCORDING to Boise City (Idaho) dispatches of the 9th, there was increasing excitement throughout the territory over the threatened, and in portions actual, uprising of the Indians. There had been a fight at Bull Creek between a small party of volunteers and a body of 100 savages, in which four of the former were killed, two wounded and one missing. Troops had been forwarded from San Francisco for their relief.

ON the 9th, a tornado passed over portions of Eastern and Middle Georgia, which resulted in the destructions of crops, fences and buildings and the loss of several lives. The Town of Cherrytown, in South Carolina, just across the Georgia line, was almost literally swept from the face of the earth.

A WASHINGTON telegram of the 10th says the adoption by the Senate and House of the conference report on the Washington Monument would secure the prompt completion of that structure.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE Greenback State Convention of Maine met at Lewiston, on the 8th, 207 delegates being present. The resolutions indorse the Toledo platform; declare fealty to the American monetary system; favor free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver, and the issuing by the Government of full legal-tender paper money, in amounts sufficient to meet the wants of trade; oppose every measure looking to resumption of specie payment, etc., etc.

THE New York National Greenback party met in State conference at Albany, on the 8th, twenty-eight counties being represented. Resolutions were adopted declaring that the greenback dollar must be full legal-tender for all debts; that the General Government alone issue money; favoring the calling in of all United States bonds, and paying them, principal and interest, in greenbacks; demanding the suppression of imported Chinese labor, and the repeal of the Resumption and National Banking acts.

THE next Missouri Democratic State Convention will be held on the 10th of July, at Jefferson City.

THE Michigan Greenback and National parties held their State Conventions at Grand Rapids, on the 8th. A compromise was effected between the two parties in the evening, and a platform was adopted calling for the unconditional repeal of the National Banking and Resumption acts; the issue of all paper money to be a full legal-tender for all public and private debts; the free coinage of silver; reduction in the hours of labor; Government lands to be reserved for actual settlers only, etc. Hon. Henry S. Smith was nominated for Governor; Lysander Woodward for Lieutenant-Governor; Geo. H. Bruce for Secretary of State; H. E. Goeschel for Treasurer; Levi Sparks for Auditor; John A. Elsler for Land Commissioner; Frank Dumont for Attorney-General, and Harriet Parsons for Superintendent of Public Instruction.

THE Indiana State Republican Convention met at Indianapolis, on the 5th, and organized by the election of Gen. Ben Harrison for Permanent President. The following nominations were made: Secretary of State, Judge Isaac S. Stevens; Auditor of State, Gen. A. G. Miller; Treasurer of State, Maj. Geo. F. Herriott; Attorney-General, Judge D. P. Baldwin; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Prof. J. T. Merrill. The resolutions adopted declare opposition to repudiation in any form; favor the appointment of a commission to consider the expediency of transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department; favor the Chinese Restriction bill as amended, was passed. The bill appropriating $50,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River was passed. The Conference report on the Military Academy Appropriation bill was agreed to. ... In the House, a resolution was adopted calling for the names of the persons who voted for the passage of the Electoral Commission bill. ... The House refused to concur in the Senate amendment to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial appropriation bill, striking out the provision forbidding the payment of salaries to persons detailed from the Army and Navy to perform civil duties. The Senate amendment to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial appropriation bill was agreed to. ...

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, June 21, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL

Although the sad event has been postponed longer than was generally expected. Mr. William Cullen Bryant's death early on the morning of Wednesday the 12th, has justified the brief obituary contained in my letter of two weeks since. The decease of hardly any public man in this country could have elicted such a unanimous and spontaneous tribute to his memory and achievement as that which has filled the press since the news of the aged poet's departure. The city flags were even half masted and the whole city seemed to unite in testifying to the universal respect felt for one of the most upright and fearless of men.

Mr. Bryant's career was an exceptional one. A precocious genius, famous when he entered his teens, and doing his best work before he was out of them, he still preserved his high fame through nearly two thirds of a century thereafter. Although as his partners confess, he was not a business man, still he accumulated a large fortune and maintained it to the end with great frugality. Although slight and rather delicate of frame, his abundant exercise and regular habits kept him in the condition and health of an athlete and thus almost up to the week of his death. At seventy-five he astonished a friend while walking with him in the grounds of his country residence on Long Island, by running a short distance in advance, jumping easily into the branches of an overhanging tree and swinging for some time by one hand. When in the city he walked up and down town every day, rain or shine, and was always one of the most conspicuous figures on the street. The last time I saw Mr. Bryant was one morning not many weeks ago as he was coming down Broadway to his office as usual. His pace was of course not rapid but in his step were much of the firmness and agility of youth. His sharp blue eyes looked out undimmed from beneath a pair of bushy brows, as snow white as the long full beard and silky hair framing the strong features with which his portraits have familiarized us, and his whole aspect was so strikingly and attractively venerable that most of the passers-by involuntarily turned to look after him as he went.

Your readers are probably aware that pretty nearly everything is to be found in one shape or another in this City of New York; but I venture to say that a majority of them would really be surprised to hear that there is a regular gold mine in operation in the very heart of the town. Such however, is the fact, and anyone curious to inspect the modes and processes by which a great proportion of the precious metal has been got out of the soil of the Pacific slope, can have this curiosity gratified without going further West than the corner of Broadway and Bond street. There, a year and a half ago, occurred the great fire in which a cluster of jewelry and silver manufactories were burned. In these buildings at the time of the fire there must have been, outside of the dozen safes which were afterwards recovered, nearly two hundred thousand dollars worth of the precious metals, only a small portion of which was immediately recovered. The remainder was scattered, in broken and blackened fragments, through the eighteen hundred tons of charred rubbish which lay piled in the cellars of the burned buildings when the smouldering fires were at last extinguished. During the first few months after the catastrophe the surface of this rubbish was a good deal picked over by the street urchins and quite a good deal taken out. Recently, two experienced miners obtained the necessary permission from Messrs. Robbins and Appleton, the owners of the building, to work the great ash heap systematically. They put in a thousand dollars worth of machinery and have now been delving, sluicing and cradling in true miner fashion for several weeks. The two men are able to wash about thirty tons of the rubbish a day, and thus far report it to pan out about eleven dollars a ton. During most of the day the work of the grimy pair thirty feet below the sidewalk is watched by a crowd of idlers and stragglers who look down upon the strange scene with eager and envious curiosity.

To abolish the dime novel would probably seem to the average Young American a more serious and revolutionary invasion of rights than the suspension of the habeas corpus, and yet it may have to be done. Within a short time there have been quite a number of cases reported in which boys who had been reading about scouts and pirates until they became convinced that they had a special mission to become one or the other have in consequence got themselves into scrapes of various dimensions. Half a dozen or more of these infant adventurers have, within as many months, been intercepted by the police on their way either to the lava beds or the roaring main and returned to homes in this city and Brooklyn from which they had run away with the firm intention of achieving desperate and heroic deeds. Most of them, when thus found, had no possessions in the way of baggage or money, but in not one of the cases reported was the prime necessity, a revolver, missing. In none of the instances above alluded to however was any more serious damage accomplished than the alarm of the parents concerned and some unfortunate retribution wreaked by the said parents in such a manner that the young desperadoes generally preferred taking meals off the mantelpiece for a few days after their return.

In the latest case of this kind, however, the work of this red fire literature was more tragical. A tow headed highwayman who had run away from home and with some kindred spirits had for some days been living in a cave in the suburbs, sallied forth from his bilding-place one night, and meeting a young man who resisted his demands for money, backed up his claims by shooting his victim dead. He was arrested, tried, and early last week was sentenced to eight years in State's prison. When questioned by the Judge as to the cause of his crime he admitted that he had been led to it by the current sensational boy's literature, but expressed no regret, and seemed to regard his conviction and sentence merely as a proper and enjoyable part of the drama in which he was the hero.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturded in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequaled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. For sale by Geo. W. Crozier.

THE INVESTIGATION.

On the 6th, the cross-examination of Mr. Anderson was undertaken by Mr. Reed. It is legal-understood to mean endeavor to convict the witness of discrepancies between his testimony before the Senate investigating Committee. The witness stated that he purposely misled the Senate Committee, but that his later statements were made on a "level basis." He repeated the details of the interview with Secty Sherman in the St. Louis restaurant, but the narrative showed no material or notable discrepancy. The cross-examination of Mr. Anderson was not concluded when the Committee adjourned.

On the 8th, the returns of the Electoral College of Louisiana were received from the Secretary of the Senate, and read. The Committee then adjourned to give the members an opportunity to vote on the Wood Tariff bill. Upon reassembling, Gen. Butler offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling upon the President to furnish the originals of letters received by him from Mr. Matthews, and copies of letters sent to Mr. Matthews in relation to an appointment for James L. Anderson. Gen. Butler said he was sorry in relation to the Louisiana Electoral returns, and stated that the papers in the hands of the Committee were the only ones in his possession. He had heard that the Republican Army of the Senate had a record of the proceedings in the Louisiana Returning Board. The cross-examination of Mr. Anderson was resumed, chiefly for the purpose of bringing out the statement that he had written a letter to Senator Matthews, in which the former had said he had been informed that Senator Matthews had said that he had written a dozen letters to Senator Matthews, in regard to the appointment of Anderson as Consul at Calcutta. Mr. Anderson stated that he had received letters from Senator Matthews, and from W. P. Kellogg; a letter from Anderson to Senator Matthews, with his Matthews's indorsement thereon, and a letter from Senator Matthews to the President's Secretary, requesting Mr. Foster to write Lewis Stevenson a letter from Stanley Matthews, asking for an appointment for Anderson, and that he was anxious to get any such letter among papers. He got the desired copy of all letters in his possession or control, which included one relating to the appointment of Anderson as Consul at Calcutta. Mr. Anderson stated that he had written a letter to Senator Matthews, in regard to the Foster agency, which he had received from Matthews, with his indorsement thereon. Mr. Anderson stated that he had written a letter to Senator

Smith, the National candidate for Governor, is likely to have an interesting season in explaining the manner in which Smith, the saleratus man, has been slandering the Greenbackers in his advertisements, published in the papers throughout the State. Here are some samples: "Smith's saleratus attends strictly to business, and has expansion enough for the whole greenback party." "It makes flour expand like a greenbacker" "Inflation, as a general thing, is attended by a reaction."

Brick Pomeroy is a demigod among the leading Greenbackers of Charlevoix county. They swear by him, and repeat his words as so much wisdom from the source of all wisdom. Here is what he says in a late number of his paper:

"In the organization of Greenback Clubs we counsel every able bodied member of these organizations to become as proficient as possible in the manual of arms. In time of peace it is well to organize now. In every greenback club there should be a drill master—that is, in every club whose members are brave enough to stand at all times, under all circumstances, to defend their rights as citizens. We, the people, are in rebellion against the untaxed nobility of this country. We, the people, propose to have our rights, peaceably and by means of the ballot, if possible—by the bayonet if we must."

The last piece of iron constructing the frame work of the new capitol, at Lansing, was raised and bolted in place at noon on the 13th. A small evergreen tree was fastened at the top of the mast, and the stars and stripes were run up amidst cheering. The flag waves at an altitude of two hundred and sixty five feet.

The New Orleans Times says that if another war comes, the Southern cavalry will put an end to the strife, and when it is over, they will water their horses in the waters of the great North ern lakes." This was the invent of the Southern cavalry a few years ago, but they got into so much hot water before they reached the lakes that the project was abandoned.

This is the declaration of a leader in the Greenback party movement who has issued charters to more than three thousand of the clubs, or "councils," as some call them.

"Now if this bond bobbing contract is not canceled, closed, and the debt paid in greenbacks, let it be paid in bayonets. If the holders of these claims against the United States want metal instead of money, in God's name let them have it."

That is the kind of stuff published in the most prominent green back organs of the Northwest.

NOTICE U. S. INTERNAL REVENUE SPECIAL TAX

Under the Revised Statutes of the United States, Sections 3232, 3237, 3278, and 3244, every person engaged in any business, avocation or employment, which renders him liable to a special tax, is required to procure and plead conspicuously in his establishment or place of business a stamp denoting the payment of said special tax for the special tax year beginning May 1, 1878. Section 3244, Revised Statutes, designates who are liable to special tax. A return, as prescribed on Form 11, is also required by law of every person liable to special tax as above. Severe penalties are prescribed for non-compliance with the foregoing requirements, or for continuing in business after April 30, 1878, without payment of tax.

Applications should be made to S. S. BAILEY, Collector of Internal Revenue, at Grand Rapids, Mich.

Michigan State Land Office, Lansing, May 1, 1878.

STATE OF MICHIGAN Thirteenth Judicial Circuit, in Chancery.

Suit pending in the Circuit Court for the county of Charlevoix in Chancery at the village of Charlevoix in said county, on the sixth day of May, A. D. 1878.

Present, Hon. Reuben Hatch, Jr., Circuit Judge.

Richmond National Bank, Complainant.

Henry O. Hurden and Agnes A. Hurden, Defendants.

In this cause, it appearing from affidavit on file, that the defendants, Henry C. Hurden and Agnes A. Hurden, are not residents of this State, but are residents of Dover, in the county of Miami, and State of Indiana. On motion of Simonds & Fletcher, complainant's solicitors, ordered that the appearance of said non-resident defendants and each of them be entered herein within three months from the date of this order, and in case of their appearance they cause their answer to the Bill of Complaint to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on the complainant's solicitors within twenty days after service on them of a copy of said Bill and notice of this order; and in default thereof said Bill will be taken as confessed by said non-resident Defendants; and it is further ordered that within twenty days the complainant cause a notice of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county, and that such publication be continued therein once in each week for six weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non-resident defendants at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for their appearance.

Real Estate Changes for the week ending June 21st, 1878

Leonard W. Hull to Albert V Markham, 40 acres in Evangeline—$500.

Marcus Presnit and wife to Peter Rotherblid, lands in Boyne Valley, Wilson, Evangeline and Norwood.—$980.

Wm. Miller and wife to Herschel Miller, 40 acres in Marion.—$420.

Geo. Rands and wife to Dingen and Ieland Boult, 40 acres of land in Evangeline—$300

U. S. to Joel Lelloy, 80 acres in South Arm.

Wm. Miller to John R. Walker, 40 acres in South Arm.—$65.

O. D. Wand and wife to James O'Hara, 80 acres in Norwood.—$400.

U. S. to Allen Brown, 80 acres in South Arm.

Cottages at the Resort.—On Wednesday, H. W. Page, F. W. Wilcox, and Prof. Brooks, of Kalamazoo, arrived here, and they have caused the first blow to be struck on the grounds of the Charlevoix Summer Resort. Five cottages here been commenced, and all our builders, not otherwise engaged, are busy in their construction. The cottages now being erected are to be 14x22, 14 feet post, with three rooms, and plaza. They are to be plain but neat and airy. There is no doubt that more than the number mentioned will be erected this summer, and other improvements made upon the grounds.

Acquitted.—Prosecuting Attorney Green was called to Boyne Falls last week to prosecute one Michael Doyle, for the alleged larceny of a pigeon nut from Wm. Coster. Doyle was acquitted, because in the evidence it was proven that a partnership existed between the complainant and defendant, in the use of the said net.

Mistake.—Brother Rose, of Petoskey Democrat, in describing Fort Mackinac calls it "Fort Holmes". The latter fort is an old fortified hill in the interior of the Island in a very commanding position, and was used before the present fort was built. Post yourself up, Rose.

It is a serious question with some of our young men whether they can raise a moustache and be attentive pupils in a juvenile Sunday school class at the same time without compromising their building materials. It is a question of whether they will cause nursing the fox on their upper lip or go into the Bible class.

C. J. Pailthorp, of Petoskey, has been appointed U. S. Commissioner for the Western District of Michigan. Although Pailthorp is a Democrat, it is an appointment with which men of all parties in this section will be satisfied. He is eminently well qualified, and quite honest for a Democrat.

We called on Detlif, the wife beater, one day last week, and found him very reticent, but evidently not dying from the knowing of a guilty conscience. He eats heartily and seems to enjoy life as well as the best of us.

We again call the attention of capitalists to the extraordinary inducements offered here for a flouring mill. A large extent of country to the South and East of Charlevoix, which now takes rank among the best developed farming sections of northern Michigan, produces annually a large amount of grain which begs for a market. To the north a fertile stretch of country suffers from the same necessity. Such an investment would prove a profitable one even now, and the future promises productive results.

The editors of Northern Michigan are to hold a Convention at Traverse City on the 15th of this month. The propeller City of Traverse has been tendered for an excursion to Mackinac, and the Clara Belle to take the scribblers to some of the fruit farms of the peninsula. We shall probably be unable to attend, but we shall think of our editorial brethren on that day with a heart full of longings for the pleasures which such gatherings always furnish.

What Charlevoix County Wants.

It wants manufactories. This county will never become rich until manufactories make it rich. We suppose that in one sense it is a rich county—may we know it to be so soon—nevertheless. But they must be here, little by little, before underlayed, and they will be developed slowly until we have manufactories.

Then would arise a host of home markets that are used every year for the manufacture of our crude material. We are only producers, and what we produce is of but little value to us because we lack consumers.

Now, manufactories—not merely saw mills, but flouring mills, furniture and stave factories—will prove the benefit of every fibre there is in the grain and the timber, and at the same time furnish consumers for our agricultural products right here at home. We export too much crude material. It wants "digesting" here, before shipment, where its substance, and all its substance, will circulate throughout the veins of our system, and invigorate every part of our business life.

We import too much at high rates, and export too much at low rates. Farm produce of all kinds is very cheap, money scarce, and the rate of interest on what there is extremely exhorbitant.

With an additional force of laborers in our villages the demand for all the products of the farm and garden would be enormously increased, and a good home market created. Money would soon become plentiful, and new industries would become fostered and established. Then again manufacturers are producers as well as consumers, and they with the farmers will make of any country with such bountiful resources as ours a rich country. Let us do all in our power to bring about the desired result.

There have already been a Tweed in the Grand Rapids city government, which is controlled by the Nationals. The new party are going to purify matters, you know. They have made a rather doubtful beginning at Grand Rapids.

Personal.—Mrs. Capt. Mike Kelso, of Chicago, an old time resident of Charlevoix, is in town visiting friends.

Mrs A. J. Stroud, and her father Mr. M. F. Norton, of Horton's Bay, left here Thursday for Boca, Ohio, where they will remain a few weeks.

Mrs. W. P. Dixon returned home from Wisconsin Thursday.

Mrs Morrison that was for the past two years taught the intermediate department of our village mixed, left yesterday for Big Rapids for a two month's sojourn. The School Board here have tendered her the position for another year, and she will return Mackinac.—The Argus, a private steam yacht, owned by one Townsend, a country Merchant somewhere hereabouts, who is also aboard with his family, was in port Sunday, on its way to Mackinac. Capt. Burton, of Milwaukee, accompanies the party. On their way back, they will stop here and fish the Jordan.

—The steamer M. W. Wright came up Sunday with a party of little Traverse and Petoskey excursionists.

—Cleared with cargoes during week. Schooners Emma, Fleetwing, Belle, scows Nellie Winlock, Blue Belle, Julia Smith. Now in port, schooners Len Higby Wescott, scows Prince and Alaska.

—A Port Huron steamer is expected to take the route between Petoskey and Northport soon.

—The Traverse Van Raalte is guaranteed $75 per day by the railroad company, for running between Petoskey and Mackinac. That's what we call a "soft thing."

—The tug Mosier left here on Wednesday for Saugatuck, whence she came.

Lots of new goods just received at Carpenter & Bartholomew's. Don't forget to call and see them. Everything selling at rock bottom prices.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

A LARGE number of bills were passed in the Senate, on the 11th, among which were the provide for the sale of portions of the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation in Kansas; providing for the publication of notices of location to enter agricultural lands under the Homestead and Exemption laws. The River and Harbor Appropriation bill was further considered, and a large number of amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was passed by 35 to 24. The Deficiency Appropriation bill was reported from committee, without amendment. In the House, the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole, and a large number of amendments to the bill were disposed of.

BILLS were passed in the Senate, on the 12th. House bill making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the Commissioners of Claims under the act of Congress of March 3, with amendments; also for the payment of claims allowed under the act known as the Southern Claims Commission; the Deficiency Appropriation bill, without amendment. The Conference report on the Pesotte-Appropriation bill was agreed to, and the bill was passed. A petition of Peter Cooper was presented and referred, praying for the repeal of the Specie-Resumption act, and remonstrating against the proposed submission to Congress until some legislative measures for financial relief should be passed. The Postponement resolution to provide for the enforcement of the Eight-Hour law was, after discussion, postponed till December next—31 to 25. In the House, a Conference Committee was appointed on the Senate's amendments to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill. A message was received from the President recommending appropriation for a Commission on the part of the United States in the International Monetary Conference. The Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was further considered in Committee of the Whole.

THE House bill to restore certain lands in Iowa to settlement under the Homestead law, and for other purposes, was passed in the Senate, on the 13th. The bill to repeal the Specie-Resumption act was taken up, and the amended substitute of the Committee on Finance for the House bill was agreed to—30 to 29—and the bill as amended was passed—35 to 24. It provides that from and after the passage of the bill United States notes shall be received with the same means in payment of 6-per-cent bonds, and that on and after Dec. 1, 1877, such notes shall be receivable for duties on imports. In the House, the conference report on the Pesotte Appropriation bill was agreed to. The Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was finally passed, with several amendments.

IN the Senate, on the 14th, the Committee on Privileges and Elections reported adversely on the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution forbidding the disfranchisement of persons in accordance with it. The House joint resolution asking for an investigation in the case of Edward O. St. Columbia, confined in an Upsilon prison, was agreed to. Bills were introduced—creating a board of trade in the Pacific Railroad Commission. House bill to increase the salary of certain judges; passed. Bills were introduced to have lost bonds, both lost, or the sight of them, given to the service of the country, from the date of twenty-two dollars a month. The Amendments to the River and Harbor bill the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bills were immediately disposed of. The amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate providing for the payment of the claim of Rhoda Shindler for a month was concurred in, and the bill as amended was passed. In the House, the Conference reports were made and agreed to on the Army and on the Indian Appropriation bills. A Conference Committee was appointed on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill. The Conference report on the Fortification bill was considered. A resolution providing for final adjournment on the 4th of July was agreed to. The bill amending the internal Revenue laws was further considered, and a great deal of confusion resulted from attempts to change the tax on tobacco, etc., and pending action on a proposed amendment, the House adjourned until

THE House bill to organize the Life-Saving Service was passed in the Senate, on the 17th, without amendment. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the Joint resolution in regard to the Eight-Hour law was postponed until the next session was defeated—yeas, 24; nays, 30. A resolution was agreed to instructing the Committee on Education and Labor to inquire into the industrial condition of the country, the extent, nature and source of the depression of business and the enforced idleness of labor, and what remedies, if any, can be provided by National legislation; also into the expediency of providing a bureau for the purpose of gathering statistics of national industries, and that the committee report by bill or otherwise. The Conference report was entered on the Revenue bill, and the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill. The Conference report on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was agreed to, and the bill was passed. A large number of amendments to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill were disposed of, several being adopted, increasing the amounts of several items in the bill; the amendment proposing an appropriation of $6,500 to enable the President to investigate, to defray the expenses and compensation of the Commission appointed to examine the River and Harbor bill were non-concurred in, and a Conference Committee was appointed. A preamble and resolution were offered by Mr. Hoar, and adopted—213 to 21—reciting the action of the Forty-fourth Congress in appointing and declaring the votes for President and Vice-President, and declaring that no subsequent Congress has jurisdiction to review such action, and any attempt to annul or disregard such action or its results would be revolutionary and is disapproved of by the House. A similar report was made by the Judiciary Committee and adopted—204 to 14—declaring also that neither the Congress of the United States nor any other tribunal that Congress can create under the Constitution has the power to review the action of the Forty-fourth Congress in declaring the result of the Presidential election.

IN the Senate, on the 15th, the consideration of the House resolution fixing the session of Congress until four p. m., on the 15th, was agreed to. A report was made in the case of Senator Grover to the effect that the evidence before the Committee on Privileges and Elections did not sustain any of the charges that his election was procured by fraud and bribery. William E. Spencer, for many years the Journal Clerk, was chosen Chief Clerk of the Senate, vice William J. McDonald, deceased. The House bill to provide for expenses of the Electoral Commission on alleged frauds in the late Presidential election, appropriating $20,000 for that purpose, was amended by adding $20,000 for the Senate investigation and $10,000 to be used under the direction of the Attorney-General to defray any expenses that may be incurred by the Department of Justice in the detection of any crimes committed against the United States in the affairs or in the manner of the investigation mentioned in the act, and the bill as amended was passed. The Conference reports on the Army and on the Indian and Harbor Appropriation bills were agreed to. A Conference Committee was ordered and appointed on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill. The amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate providing for the payment of the claim of Rhoda Shindler for a month was concurred in, and the bill as amended was passed. In the House, the Conference reports were made and agreed to on the Army and on the Indian and Harbor Appropriation bills. A Conference Committee was appointed on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill. The Conference Committee on the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill reported a disagreement. A message was received from the President recommending appropriation for a Commission on the part of the United States in the International Monetary Conference. The Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was further considered in Committee of the Whole.

THE House bill to restore certain lands in Iowa to settlement under the Homestead law, and for other purposes, was passed in the Senate, on the 18th. The bill to repeal the Specie-Resumption act was taken up, and the amended substitute of the Committee on Finance for the House bill was agreed to—30 to 29—and the bill as amended was passed—35 to 24. It provides that from and after the passage of the bill United States notes shall be received with the same means in payment of 6-per-cent bonds, and that on and after Dec. 1, 1877, such notes shall be receivable for duties on imports. In the House, the Conference report on the Pesotte Appropriation bill was agreed to. The Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was finally passed, with several amendments.

IN the Senate, on the 14th, the Committee on Privileges and Elections reported adversely on the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution forbidding the disfranchisement of persons in accordance with it. The House joint resolution asking for an investigation in the case of Edward O. St. Columbia, confined in an Upsilon prison, was agreed to. Bills were introduced—creating a board of trade in the Pacific Railroad Commission. House bill to increase the salary of certain judges; passed. Bills were introduced to have lost bonds, both lost, or the sight of them, given to the service of the country, from the date of twenty-two dollars a month. The Amendments to the River and Harbor bill the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bills were immediately disposed of. The amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate providing for the payment of the claim of Rhoda Shindler for a month was concurred in, and the bill as amended was passed. In the House, the Conference reports were made and agreed to on the Army and on the Indian and Harbor Appropriation bills. A Conference Committee was appointed on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill. The Conference report on the Fortification bill was considered. A resolution providing for final adjournment on the 4th of July was agreed to. The bill amending the internal Revenue laws was further considered, and a great deal of confusion resulted from attempts to change the tax on tobacco, etc., and pending action on a proposed amendment, the House adjourned until

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, June 28, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

The stupendous engineering operations incident to the building of the Brooklyn bridge have been carried on with wonderful success and safety, the first serious accident for two years or more occurring last week, when one of the strands belonging to the four great cables was being put in place. This strand was something like half a mile long, reaching from Brooklyn to the New York anchorage, and weighed about forty tons. It had been made fast at Brooklyn end, drawn up in safety over the Brooklyn pier, across the river over the New York pier, and was just about to be finally attached at the New York anchorage, when one of the wire ropes of the hoisting apparatus parted. Then, in the words of an eye witness, "with a roar like that of an immense cannon the strand sprang like a great snake away back into the air, up towards the pier tower on the edge of the river, with a cloud of dust. For a moment the whole platform of granite quivered under the terrible recoil and then the strand sagged between the towers, its middle burying itself in the river with a long white splash, throwing the water up like a submarine explosion in all directions all the way across. Fortunately, the river was clear, and the only damage done was the wetting of a ferry-boat which was passing at the time. The spring of the wire carried it clear over the houses in the 900 feet interval up to the pier, off telegraph poles. Two men who were engaged in the work were struck by the flying monster and buried into eternity. It seemed almost a miracle that such an accident could occur without greater loss of life, especially as upon the end of the strand dangled a mass of iron weighing nearly a ton; but the very immensity of the force rendered the occurrence so slightly destructive by jerking this resistless missile clean over the houses and streets between the anchorage and the river. Had the impetus been less and the ponderous mass been allowed to drop to the earth instead of taking this gigantic lean, the destruction which it might have wrought is terrible to imagine.

In the Brooklyn Police Court was witnessed last week the closing scene of a brief but spirited drama combining romance, comedy and pathos. On the day previous a young lady of twenty was walking along one of the avenues of that city when she suddenly felt her pocket-book taken from her hand and turning about saw a man making off with it. Being a girl of spirit, she incontinently gave chase; but after running several blocks she found that the object of her pursuit was widening the distance between them. Seeing a butcher's cart standing by the sidewalk she jumped in, whipped up, and after brief but exciting race overhauled the culprit. He was quite inoffensive looking man of middle age with nothing of the thief in his appearance, and when interrogated by the girl as to the cause of his crime broke completely down, saying that he had gone almost crazy at watching his wife and two little children starve and that he had taken the pocket-book in a fit of momentary desperation. Said the young lady in court next day, "When he told me how his family were suffering, I went with him to his house, and found it just as he stated. He took his little child on his knee and cried, and his wife could not imagine what it was all about. He did not want me to tell her, but he finally told her himself that he had taken my pocket-book. I then gave her part of my money. Then the officers came and I told them I did not wish to make any complaint against him, and would not have come here if I had not been compelled to." There were applause and tears a plenty from the court-room audience that morning. The prepossessing appearance of the sorely tempted prisoner and the heart-breaking story of his sufferings from sickness and absolute penury which was told by his fair advocate with earnest simplicity, worked strongly even upon the judge, whose daily experiences are such as to render him proof against any ordinary displays of emotion.

The charge upon which the man had been committed was a grave one, that of highway robbery; and had it not been for the girl's effective pleading a long imprisonment must have followed. But so persistent was she that a consultation was had with the district attorney and his consent obtained to a change of the record, which enabled the judge to discharge the grateful prisoner, who, I am happy to say, found friends at once, and is in no further danger of want. The heroine of the affair has since received complimentary letters from all quarters for her humane and spirited conduct.

There was a piece of quick railroad building done in Brooklyn the other night. A company had a charter to build a rapid transit road from Fulton Ferry right through the heart of the city, the only condition being that a mile of the road should be built within a certain time. This time, after having been several times extended by the Legislature, was about to expire, and a very valuable franchise to become lost. So the company collected some four hundred workmen and sufficient material, conveyed them quietly to the spot after nightfall, and commenced work. When the astonished residents along the route awoke the next morning there lay a mile of track, ties, rails, and joints all complete, and the new rapid-transit line had thus, in the night, become a fixed fact.

In New York rapid transit continues to be a success. The new Sixth Avenue line is said to be carrying an average of twenty thousand passengers a day, and the East Side road is rapidly approaching completion. The "old original" elevated road this week barely escaped a terrible catastrophe on Greenwich street. A lot of young ragmuffins filled an old sack with stones, and climbing up to the track by one of the supporting pillars, fastened the sack across one of the rails, presumably for the fun of seeing a train full of people sent crashing down into the street twenty feet below. Fortunately the obstruction was seen and removed in time to prevent this catastrophe. The ringleader of this band of miniature train-wreckers has reached the mature age of ten years. He will make an invaluable member of society if he lives long enough.

Are newsstands a nuisance and an obstruction to the streets? That is one of the leading questions of the day here, and one which has raised a tempest in the municipal tea-pot. Some weeks ago the Common Council passed an ordinance authorizing the erection of one of the obnoxious structures on a certain street corner. Property owners objected and a "muss" was the result. Judge Hackett's attention was called to the subject and he in turn instructed the Grand Jury in matter in such a manner that they promptly found a true bill against the entire offending aldermen. The latter became alarmed and retained half a dozen lawyers, among whom was David Dudley Field, to protect them against the Nemesis of public opinion. Their counsel made the usual motion to quash the indictment on technical grounds, and, after a hard fight, have succeeded. The aldermen breathe freely again, but they have had their lesson and have learned a little wholesome respect for the laws, which they very much needed.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the Liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. For sale by Geo. W. Crouter.

THE INVESTIGATION.

The Committee resumed its session, as the morning of the 11th.

The Chairman presented a letter which he had caused to be sent to Mr. Matthews, with the subpœna, in which he stated that the Committee did not desire to interfere in any way with his duties as Senator, and that there would be every disposition to meet his convenience in respect to the time of his attendance.

Mr. J. E. Anderson was recalled and questioned relative to the appointment of his brother to a position in the Philadelphia Custom-House. He stated in substance that he had told Hon. Smith that he would withdraw all claims he might have upon the Administration if the appointment were made, and gave a letter to that effect. Witness identified a letter to Lieut.-Gov. Ammen, sent during the time he was Supervisor of Registration, in which it was intimated that ballot-stuffing was going on in the parish. In explanation, he said he carried his impressions from the statements of his Republican friends. He had called upon Gov. Kellogg after his return from the penal, and advised that the ballots be allowed to go by default, as a basis for a claim of wholesale intimidation. The Republicans of the parish thought the action good and carried it out. In relation to Investigations before the Senate Committee, he said he had such as good a Republican as he could find. Witness clearly remembered the circumstances attending the Wiltz agreement, and stated that the statement of Wiltz he had not been forged therein.

Jno. A. Bonlin, an Appointment Clerk in the Postoffice Department, stated that Judge Key had entered the service Oct. 18, 1876, under the administration of Gen. Tyner. He was dismissed April 1, 1877, and appointed special agent April 17, 1877, in regard to Star-route matters. Witness had been signed by Senators McCrary, Hoar, and others.

Ex-Congressman Darrell testified that he first became acquainted with Matthews in New Orleans. Had visited him to urge the appointment of Packard as Collector of the Port of New Orleans. At first he opposed the appointment, but after Anderson had been to see Hayes in person, he, Matthews, had met the President out not want Packard appointed. He thought that Anderson and his own influence were the reasons why Matthews changed. After Packard was disposed of, some of his friends had proposed himself for the place, and Spofford and Mattocks had promised to help him. Witness knew Mrs. Jenks; had seen her in Washington in January, at which time she told him she had the Sherman letter and going to see the lady in Packard. She had stated, subsequently, that she had it. Witness had had a copy, and letting others. He had talked with Matthews in March about the letter, and he had told the paper in Anderson's house was one of the lessons. And that Sherman had never written the letter. Matthews claimed he had bundle letters from Andersons to Anderson were identical and read. In answer to a question he had not referred to that subject on any pending, between his private solicitude and Hayes and his friends in New York, by which the statements and letters in the Anderson possession were to be surrendered, and had become known. Anderson had subsequently told him that they were to be published, and the question arose as to that Matthews would lose his seat. He had likewise written a letter, on the 30 of March, on the part of Anderson, stating further that the understanding with Matthews was that he should be appointed Collector, and that then the compromising letters should be surrendered. In reply to a question from Mr. McMahon, witness said he considered Anderson's appointment and that yet Anderson was recommended by Thomas C. Anderson and Wells, of the Internal Revenue. They had certainly declared Packard and received Smith's appointment. He had at the 28d of April written to Anderson and requested him to bring his papers. He had not seen them but the next day to look them over and see whether he had any which could enable Matthews to render that desired assistance. He had been told that copies of the letters could be found in the New York Sun since December previous, and also in the Louisville Courier-Journal. They had very

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 18th, a resolution was passed extending the session six weeks more, on the 19th. Several amendments to Sundry Civil Appropriation bill were agreed to, one being to pay $6,000 to pay the salary of the Halifax Fishery Commission, and the bill as amended was passed. The House non-concurred in these amendments, a Conference Committee was appointed, and reported. A provision was inserted and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means to allow Senator McDonald to testify before the Potter Investigating Committee. The Army bill for the relief of soldiers on the public lands was passed, extending the provisions of the act allowing settlers who had their crops injured by grasshoppers to leave their homesteads temporarily for the purpose of obtaining employment. The Senate resolutions declaring that the treaty with China, allowing unrestricted immigration to this country, should be modified and calling the attention of the President to the subject, was concurred in in the House. The Senate amendments to the bill to repeal the Bankrupt law act were non-concurred in 120 to 116. Ten votes in the majority favoring the adjournment and the bill thus failed of passage. The Senate bill to prevent intimidation of voters at the next presidential mid election, on the 19th, was passed. A bill was introduced providing for judicial ascertainment of claims against the United States. Adjourned to November 1877, at Chillicothe, Ohio, Perry Benker, for the murder of Mr. and Mrs. McVey, on the 26th of October, 1877; at Little Rock, Ark., Jacob Lewis (colored), for the murder of another colored man, at Fredericktown, Md.; H. Conley, for the murder of Sebastian Cooley, his cousin, on the 4th of April, 1877.

IT was reported from Texas, on the 23d, that Gen. McKenzie and Shaffer, with their command, had returned to the American side of the Rio Grande from an expedition into Mexico. After penetrating several miles into that country they were met by a detachment of the Mexican Army, under Col. Valdez, who demanded to know the object of the invasion, and forbid their proceeding further. McKenzie warmed them out of the way, and the Mexicans finally yielded, and afterward offered to escort the forces on their return to the place of crossing, which offer was rejected. No captures were made during the expedition.

IT was stated in a Washington special, on the 24th, that the President had decided to carry into effect the provision in the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill continuing the authority of the Hot Springs Commission, but as yet the clause had been enrolled after its adoption by both houses. Congress will be depended upon to ratify this action, and also to pass a deficiency for the payment of the Commissioners.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

HON. T. J. QUINN, Member of Congress for the Albany (N. Y.) District, died, at his home, on the 18th.

THE Maine Democratic State Convention met at Portland, on the 18th, and nominated Alonzo Barrobin for Governor. Resolutions were adopted declaring, against any further issue of Government bonds; opposing an irredeemable currency, and the present National Banking system, and favoring the gradual substitution of greenbacks for National Bank bills; inderning fully the action of the majority of the National House of Representatives in their investigation of the alleged Presidential election frauds, and insisting that the guilty parties, whoever they may be, should be punished.

NOT long ago, President Hayes nominated two colored men to be Justices of the Peace for the District of Columbia. The Senate, on the 18th, voted not to confirm the nominations.

ACCORDING to a Portland (Ore.) dispatch of the 18th, the latest election returns rendered certain the election of Thayer (Rep.) for Governor by a majority ranging from forty to seventy. The Democratic majority in the Legislature on joint ballot would be twelve.

THERE was a wedding at the White House, in Washington, on the evening of the 19th, the third event of the kind that has been celebrated there in the sixty-four years that it has been occupied by Presidents. The groom was Russell Hastings, of Rockford, Ill., and the bride Miss Platt, the President's niece and ward.

THE Iowa State Republican Convention met at DesMoines, on the 19th, and organized by the choice of ex-Senator Harlan as Temporary, and ex-Senator Wright as Permanent President, with the usual Vice-Presidents and Secretaries. The following nominations were made: Secretary of State, Capt. J. A. Thrift; State Auditor, B. R. Sherman; State Treasurer, George W. Bemis; Register of Land Office, J. K. Powers; Attorney-General, J. F. Molunkin; Supreme Judge, J. H. Rothrock; Supreme Court Reporter, J. S. Runnells; Supreme Court Clerk, E. J. Holmes; Bank Hatton, of the Burlington Hawk-Eye, was elected Chairman of the State Central Committee. The platform is on the Republican party and affirms its old time principles and policies; declares the permanent pacification of the South to be a paramount duty; opposes and rejoices the "new Democratic dogma of Home Rule;" gives special credit to the soldiers for the services during the late war; insists that the republican party alone is the party of law and order; applauds its financial policy; denounces the rebel raids upon the Treasury; favors a reduction of taxation; deprecates the current attack upon the Presidential title, etc., etc.

THE Vermont State Democratic Convention was held on the 20th. The following nominations were made: For Governor, W. H. H. Bingham; Lieutenant-Governor, Jerome W. Farce; Treasurer, Geo. E. Royce.

THE Greenback State Convention of Missouri was held at Sedalia, on the 20th. The following nominations were made: A. L. Gilstrop for Judge of the Supreme Court; W. Haydin for Railroad Commissioner, and J. M. Greenwood for Superintendent of Public Instruction. The platform demands the repeal of the Specie-Resumption act and the issue of absolute money in greenbacks equal to gold and silver; that all bonds now subject to redemption be immediately redeemed in absolute money equivalent to coin; that the Federal Constitution be amended so as to limit and restrain Congress from exempting any property, stocks, bonds or credits from taxation, and from granting all subsidies, etc., etc.

THE Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, passed by Congress just before the close of the recent session, has been discovered to be defective through an unlegal blunder of the Enrolling Clerk. The section providing for the continuance of the Hot Springs Commission, which was created in 1877 to appraise and sell the Government reservation in Hot Springs (Ark.) region, was almost entirely omitted in the enrollment of its bill to the office of the Clerk of the House. Because of this omission, the Hot Springs Commission will have to suspend operations until Congress can again act upon the subject.

MRS. ELIZABETH R. TILTON was excommunicated at a special business meeting of Plymouth Church, of Brooklyn, N. Y., on the evening of the 21st.

GREAT excitement has recently been created in Washington by a report of Commander Ackley sailing of a mysterious conduct toward a lady. The friends of the accused gentleman published a statement, on the 23d, contradicting the version of the story as given to the public. It was stated that Gen. Rosser had protected the lady at the time of the assault; that her love for Ackley and had kicked the latter out of the restaurant where the affair occurred. A duel between the two gentlemen was thought to be imminent.

JUSTICE MILLER, of the United States Supreme Court, on the 23d, had a very dangerous carriage accident on Capitol Hill, Washington, which for a time was regarded as fatal. He was very low on the 24th, but the physicians hoped for his recovery.

ON the 23d, MOSES A. Wheelock, for twenty years President of the New York Stock Exchange, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head with a revolver.

MR. WATTERSON, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, publishes an open letter in the New York Sun of the 23d, in which he accuses Abram S. Hewitt with having withheld the opinion of Mr. Tilden as to the Electoral bill at the time of the meeting of the Committee of Advisement on the 15th of January, 1877, at which meeting he says Mr. H was absent as an open act as Mr. Tilden's agreements, although he knew he (Tilden) disapproved the proposed measure. Mr. Watterson says the members of the committee had agreed to support the bill, most of them believing it to be the emanation of their chief. Mr. Watterson then reiterates the charge that Mr. Hewitt's failure to tell the committee what Mr. Tilden had said to him the day before, was the practical suppression of Mr. Tilden's views on his counsels, and to all intents a betrayal of his friend. Mr. W. repeats and declares the charge of personal dishonor upon Mr. Hewitt. He then proposes to submit the matter to an arbitration of five of the members of the said Committee of Advisement, and says if they do not make his charge good he will make Mr. H. a public apology.

THE election returns from Oregon are as follows: For Governor—Whitaker (Dem.), 16,954; Hines (Rep.), 15,884; Campbell (Ind.), 926. Governor—Beckman (Rep.), 16,069; Dunyer (Dem.), 15,967. Wilkins (Ind.), 1,393. Secretary of State—Kartell (Rep.), 16,146; Reams (Dem.), 15,852; Cates (Ind.), 1,393. Treasurer—Cronin (Rep.), 16,055; Brown (Dem.), 15,631; Sinclair (Ind.), 738. Carter (Rep.), for State Pubster, and Powell (Rep.), for Superintendent of Public Instruction, were elected.

IS a dispatch from New Orleans, on the 24th, Congressman Acklen explicitly denies the statement that Gen. Rosser had assaulted him to a Washington restaurant, because of the latter's badly, etc. Evening Post.

—Mr. and Mrs. Flinn, of Sidney, Ohio, were awakened on the other night by a noise which they thought was coming from under the bed. Supposing burglars to be the cause, Mr. Flinn hurriedly jumped from bed, lighted a shotgun, and returned. Mrs. Flinn, all excited, asked was just rising, and her right foot hung over the bedside. At this, Flinn, supposing the moving foot to be the head of the intruder, who was coming from his place of concealment, without any ado or hesitancy, fired. The wife screamed, and the husband flew about in a delirium. The light was brought, and Mr. Flinn discovered that he had shot his wife instead of a burglar. It was necessary to amputate a portion of the foot.—Exchange.

—A horrible affair occurred at Barksville, Va., a few days ago. About two years since Anderson Miller married Jennie Tyler, a good-looking girl, but possessing a vicious temper and will of her own that gave indications that she would make her husband a hen-pecked husband. At first they seemed to be leading a happy married life, but gradually the wife's temper manifested itself in various ways, and on the day in question the connubial quarrels assumed a most awful tragedy. The husband and wife were seated at the breakfast-table with an invited guest. When the husband chanced to discover a fly in the biscuit he thought he saw one. Anyhow, he said, "Jennie, you are a bad cook, to let flies get in the bread." The wife's temper increased as she spoke, finally she called her husband a liar. He remonstrated with her for using such language in the presence of an invited guest. Early beside herself with rage, she caught up a new ax which was lying on the hearthstone, and before the guest could interfere she had brained her husband. When he fell to the floor she brought the keen blade of the ax down on his neck, completely severing the head from the body, the head rolling on the floor and the body rolling under the table.

MRS. Samuel H. Taylor, widow of the Principal of Phillips' Academy, Andover, Mass., died very suddenly on a recent Sunday, at the age of sixty years; just after rising from the breakfast table. Her husband died seven years ago in precisely the same manner.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Miss Henrietta Dana, youngest daughter of R. H. Dana, jr., has recently been converted to the Roman Catholic faith. Miss Dana was educated at a convent in Paris with the present Queen of Spain, and was the author of the article in a recent number of Scribner's Monthly on "A Queen at School."

—The pair of white duck trousers which Com. Perry wore during one of his engagements on the lakes are owned by a descendant of the Commodore, the Rev. Elias Perry, of Ocklawaha, Fla., who has them inclosed in a frame and protected by a glass. They are hung in the reception room and attract much attention from visitors.

—I shall not live to see the first train run on the Ninth-street track," said John Patten, of the Pacific Hotel, Greenwich street, New York. He was one of the most vigorous and persistent opponents of Rapid Transit, and thought the Elevated Railroad scheme as long as he could. They gave up, despairing, six hours after his death the first car passed over the just completed track.

—Fourteen thousand new books, containing 2,000,000 pages, were published in Germany in 1877 by pigeon-holers. The total number of copies was 2,400,000, or one for every seventieth person in the Empire. The 8,000,000 almanacs printed annually are not included in this computation. Statistics show that the new books are bought by only 2 per cent. of the population, and herein is a curious phenomenon that a Nation prodigious in the manufacture and sale of books should buy, comparatively, so few, for at least half of every edition is unsold or is sold outside of Germany. N. Y. Post.

—Two self-possessed men: Mr. Seaman Baldwin, of Oyster Bay, N. Y., twenty years, died, and some peculiar circumstances in his case led to a post-mortem examination. This revealed, under the end of the stomach, three buttons, two of bone and one of metal, imbedded in the lining of the stomach, as first to be discoverable to the eye, and causing a thickening of the stomach-case some three-fourths of an inch. These stones had worn a hole through the stomach, and death was caused by dropsy, or drowning. It was the opinion of the physicians that these stones had been there for many years.

—A deserted house: Haverhill, Mass., has a singular history. Twenty years ago, an energetic young mechanic actually engaged to marry a young woman of that city, and actually had fixed to lay up money enough to buy a house in which to take his bride. One morning he invited her to drive, and, all delighted, at first, in front of a handsome brick house in the suburbs. He took her in, showed her that it was nicely furnished, and at last told her that she was its future owner. To her inquiry as to how he had got the money he replied that he had been fortunate enough to buy a lottery ticket which had drawn a prize of $25,000. She was a girl of strict principles, and declined such gifts. Her fiancé, however, left him forever, and the house still stands tenantless.—N. Y. Evening Post.

A SEPTUAGENARIAN COUPLE.

The following stanzas were not written for publication, but were selected from a mass of papers in one green sweep. Dean Hord filed away in the recesses of a long septuagenarian couple of the old school. They had been wedded fifty years, and children and children's children for nearly half a century. The writers were soldiers, who paraded to the funeral of that illustrious hero who has adopted the old but silent motto of "Mi Husband" were written by the wife on her seventieth birthday, and left on the table in the library:

MY HUSBAND.

Who is not vainly said, "Dearest, come,
Forsake your solitude, and be my home?"
And with one or the wide world roam?
My husband.

Who gently led me in the way
And loosened my heart to bless the day
That I was born into being with?
My husband.

Who at first sounding of alarm
Would fold me to his manly arm,
To shield me from impending harm?
My husband.

What first token of distress,
Exhibited to restlessness,
Off comes he by his fond caress?
My husband.

Who, if long, wakeful nights there be,
When sleep—most needful—flies from me,
Will keep awake for company?
My husband.

Who, when I, with each nerve unstrung,
Would much more round me caress among,
If I should fall would "hold his hand"?
My husband.

Whose all in haste to man our isles
One word in thoughtlessness set cares,
Who asks forgiveness with a kiss?
My husband.

Who through all changing scenes of life,
In height, the dark, the peace, the strife,
Would call me naught but "precious wife?"
My husband.

When on the couch of suffering laid,
With throbbing pulse and aching head,
Who cares as Sadches round my bed?
My husband.

Who, when of kindred dear bereft,
And my sad heart in tears is left,
Proves that my "mother's" cause is left?
My husband.

Which overwhelmed with grief and fears,
And through the gloom of midnight spheres,
Who cheers my heart and wipes my tears?
My husband.

Who, when I lie done with all below
And death's chill waters hasten on me,
Would bear with me the parting throe?
My husband.

MY WIFE.

IN RESPONSE TO HER QUERIES, "MY HUSBAND."

Whose wisdom, in the days of yore,
Should first with vows of tenderness power,
Inflaming pangs unknown before?
My wife.

Who adored me in my manhood,
And, in my simple little "Yes,"
Thought all my wee boldnessdreams
My wife.

Who did, with look almost divine,
My woes and sorrows sweet assuage,
And gave her priceless heart for mine?
My wife.

Who to the altar went with me,
Our hearts aglow with vestacy,
In my good angel vowed to be?
My wife.

Who, when our home was new,
Did most anew bless Cannan a shore,
And sang with me her sweetest song?
My wife.

Who, when my sadness drew me over,
Will meet me in bleak Canaan a shore,
And sing with me her sweetest song?
My wife.

THE TOWER OF LONDON.

A Palace and a Prison for Eight Centuries—Illustrious Prisoners—Ghosts and Jewels.

On the bank of the Thames, half a mile below London bridge, is the famous citadel or fortress, a place of pleasure-interest to the student of English history. It is not a single structure, as its name would indicate, but a complex of towers inclosed within an area of a little more than twelve acres. During the 800 years of its existence, London Tower has served the purpose of a royal palace, a royal fortress and a royal prison; it is now a royal armory and museum. As your correspondent visited its halls and dungeons many a sad, dark, bloody page of England's history crowded into memory. Kings and queens, and Princes; noble women and brave men, as well as criminals and traitors, have dragged their chains over those floors, or met a bloody death within those walls.

Old soldier guides dressed in the costume of Henry VIII., with pretentious manners and much show of authority, conduct visitors through the Tower. Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these guides. They wear bright red coats, trimmed with gold and silver tinsel; knee-breeches, long white silk stockings and red slippers; a broad-brimmed black velvet hat, trimmed with ribbons, and a large ruffle around the neck.

The old archway known as "Traitor's Gate," opening from the edge of the river, is a large, gloomy portal, through which offenders against the Government were secretly conveyed to prison. With what dismal forebodings the prisoners must have passed that gate—the gate that proved to many of them the gate of death.

That gate through which before
Went Sydney, Essex, Babington, Cranmer, More.

The oldest and most prominent building in the inclosure is the white tower, a massive square stone castle, with turreted corners, and walls in some places fifteen feet thick. It was erected by William the Conqueror about A. D. 1078, though Shakespeare seems anxious to refer it back many centuries farther, even as far as Julius Cæsar.

Beneath this tower are the dark, damp, dismal dungeons used for State prisoners. In the first story are life-size figures, each one clad in armor to represent the different styles used during the reigns of successive sovereigns for centuries past; so that one can trace the changes in war fashions from the earliest times until now. Among others is a figure of Henry VIII. in the detestable Henry VIII. It is richly inlaid with gold. "Queen Elizabeth's" suit is the most curious worn by

OUR PARIS LETTER.
New York, July 8, 1878.

Dear Sentinel:

After an unusually long delay which has given a pause to the world of sweltering humanity, the summer may be said to have fairly set in. The mercury has at one leap gone to the top of the tube. All other warning hinted and has come to us without preparing note. Now are the days when life is unendurable and every [illegible] is [illegible] to leave for [illegible] where its limits can vary at will from a pavilion on the [illegible] to the [illegible] where the [illegible] is [illegible] to [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE INVESTIGATION.

THE SENATE COMMITTEE.

THE Matthews Senate Committee was in session for two hours and a half on the 21st. When the doors were opened, Judge E. Anderson was sworn, but being refused counsel, he said that he had on statements to make nor questions to answer. The Committee went into private session for the third time. When the door was again opened, Mr. Anderson was informed that he should answer such questions as the committee might see proper to put, and was told he age and occupation. Mr. Anderson replied that he had no desire to throw obstacles in the way, but Senator Matthews was a lawyer, and who there looking after his interests and he (Anderson) did not see why he should not have a right to ask after his own interests. The questions were repeated, when Senator Matthews said papers in Matthews's possession, and, if so, what; but Anderson replied that the Senator had no right to ask him to answer questions. He signed that paper but the committee refused to allow it to be entered as a protest, and had a discussion thereon by quite a heated character. Anderson told the witness that Mr. Burke had offered to pay him for his testimony, adding, to see if Senator Matthews would go better the better Committee he would testify.

Senator Alcorn then asked Senator Matthews if he had not an opposite spoke with reference to some one without Anderson's testimony. Mr. Matthews said he could not very much to take this responsible of making any suggestions to the Committee in the subject, but as a general thing he did not think it at any future time that the committee of the Senate would meet for the purpose of assisting the Committee in any way within his power in the object and purposes for which it was organized and authorized. He only came with a full desire of working until the Committee could have the power of the Senate to compel the presence of witnesses and obtain from the Committee of the other House the statement which Anderson had already made under oath before it, and which constituted the ground and basis on which the Committee had asked the Senate for the appointment of the Committee; and the committee obtain that testimony, he was ready to go on as if it had been delivered again before the Senate Committee; he thought the Committee ought to decide upon the course to be pursued, but did not wish to be considered as giving any opinion or advice, or expressing any wish in regard to the matter.

Another question of the Committee followed. When the doors were opened Anderson was informed by the Chairman that the Committee had decided that they would require his testimony before the Committee. The Chairman then asked him if he was willing to answer such questions as might be propounded to him and he regarded that he was not. The Chairman responded that it was evident Anderson set the Committee at defiance.

Senator Alcorn then stated that, in the absence of the Senate, the Committee had no power to punish for contempt, he therefore moved that the Committee adjourn, subject to the call of the Chairman. The motion was agreed to, and the Committee accordingly adjourned.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEE.

The Committee resumed its sittings on the 21st. Mr. Morrison presiding, in the absence of Mr. Potter.

Capt. Thomas A. Jenks testified that, in 1868, he held the office of Deputy United States Marshal and resided in Jacksonville, Florida. Had taken in the parish last informed him that they did not prefer charges at present of intimidation. Here Mr. McMahon objected to any testimony being given on the part of Rev. Sherman, and he submitted that he had written that letter to Mr. Anderson. As he had not written it, he had no interest in showing what had been the qualifications of Anderson as a witness. Repeated questions. A long discussion ensued, at the conclusion of which the witness was allowed to answer. Witness said that Anderson had a bad character for truth and veracity. Witness was then asked if he would believe Anderson under oath before a committee of Congress. Objected to. Witness said that he had not been sworn. He himself had seen Anderson and he saw him sign it before Judge Bigg. A paper was produced and signed by Anderson. Witness proceed to him and Anderson and he went to Tallahassee to see Governor Reed, and Anderson came to the office of Governor Reed's counsel and made his statement and wanted Anderson came to the office of Governor Reed's counsel and made his statement and wanted Anderson to sign it. Witness objected to it, and had never signed it. Witness said the first time he saw Anderson after that was in Washington, his wife had called on Gov. Ingham and Judge Shellabarger and wanted to get him to himself but discussed Louisiana affairs generally. He did not remember that he said anything the last that Sherman letter was in Mr. Weber's possession. His wife had said that Mrs. Weber had shown her having seen the letter. Witness had not said anything in response to a letter from Ingham and Shellabarger, but remembered that she had any information or document which would be useful to the Committee. Witness had not intimated to Anderson that he was a witness. Witness had not said that he did not think she, or any one else, had any to do with it. Witness further stated that he had told Anderson that he did not know if his wife had ever corresponded with Sherman in relation to that letter. Witness had been intimate with Anderson until he requested Anderson to go back on that address. The original Anderson-Weber agreement was shown to the witness, who recognized the body of the paper and the signature of Anderson as Anderson's, and his wife stated he recognized the other signatures of Weber or either of the witnesses.

This investigation was resumed on the 24th. Before proceeding with the examination of witnesses, Mr. Butler stated that, during the examination of Stanley Matthews he would be absent, since he had seen a statement in the papers that the reason he (Matthews) did not appear to testify before the adjournment was a fear of being assaulted by some Butler man. He, McMahon and Mr. Reed each explained the presence at one of the preceding days and withdrew all objectionable remarks.

Capt. Jenks was recalled and further examined by Mr. McMahon, in regard to his visit to the house of Mrs. Weber's sister. The latter came at the instance of Gov. Kellogg and Mr. Caldwell had paid her expenses. Anderson, I was subpœnaed, had certain documents which belong desired to get, and Mrs. Jenks was in Washington for that purpose. Witness denied that he ever threatened Anderson's letter to him in relation to that document, viz., he did not understand and that he wrote for a description or explanation. Anderson had written him that if a moment was worth $1,000 that certain Democrats would pay that sum for it. He had seen it stated in the newspapers that his wife had the so-called Sherman letter, but she had told him it was not true. Witness examined the statement that he knew nothing of so-called Sherman letter until it was examined by Pitkin, on the 9th of January.

Mrs. Jenks, wife of the preceding, testified that Anderson had written to her and had signed in relation to the document he termed the "Sherman letter." She knew nothing of the character of it until after Anderson had stated until last January. She had seen the document picked up from a table and kept it in her possession for two and a half minutes, when she gave it to Weber. Witness then gave the contents of the letter she handed to Weber, repeating word for word the so-called "Sherman letter." She had never seen the document since she handed it to Weber. Her husband had told her that Pitkin had mentioned the existence of the letter. Mrs. Anderson wrote to her on the 6th of January. She came to Washington in consequence of her communication. Witness had written to Anderson requesting if there was any letter in the possession of her husband relative to Sherman's letter, that gentleman did not impress her much. She, however, said she did not know that she could get them. She could not say whether Mr. Matthews was there; she knew she met him until she saw him in the Senate. Further questioning failed to induce the witness to say what disposition was made of the letter she was to hand to Sherman. She said she was the person who got Anderson to go back to Louisiana. She was, she said, never indifferent to politics. Politics in Louisiana was a science. She considered it a small matter to aid in the cause of the Republican party. She admitted having

THE INVESTIGATION.

THE SLATE COMMITTEE.

The Matthews Senate Committee was in session for two hours and a half on the 31st. When the doors were opened, James K. Anderson was sworn, but being refused counsel, he said that he had no statements to make nor questions to answer. The Committee went into private session for the third time. When the door was again opened, Mr. Anderson was informed that he should answer any questions that the committee might see proper to put, and was asked his age and occupation. Anderson replied that he had no desire to throw obstacles in the way, but Senator Matthews was a lawyer, and was there looking after his interests, and he (Anderson) did not care why he should not have a lawyer to look after his own interests. The questions were repeated, also, whether he had passed any papers to Matthews (assessors, &c.). If so, what, but Anderson was decided in answers. Senator WADE asked if he would tell us that he got all defiance—but he will on the Committee, and Anderson replied that the Senator put it too sticking, that he might intend to say that he declined answering, to which if Senator Matthews would go before the Potter Committee he would testify.

Senator ALLISON then asked Senator Matthews if he had any questions to make with reference to going on with—and Anderson's—testimony. Mr. Matthews said he believed very much in the law in responding as of making any suggestions to the Committee as he supposed they were present there and should be at any future time that the committee might see proper, but for the present, for the purpose of assisting the Committee in any way he could, he knew of no other course than to continue. He would it was organized and authorized to only examine the slate affair, and during until the Committee could have the power of the Senate to compel persons and witnesses who to obtain from the Committee of the other House the statements which they had made to that body under oath before it, and which constituted the only evidence in the case. Senator ALLISON then asked the Senator for the appointment of the Committee, whether the Committee was present as an organized body. Mr. Matthews replied that he was not present as an organized body, but that the Committee ought to decide upon the course to be pursued, and did not wish to be considered as giving any opinion or advice, or expressing any wish in regard to the matter.

Another consultation of the Committee followed. When the doors were opened Anderson was informed by the Chairman that the Committee had decided that they would require his testimony before the Committee. The Chairman then asked him if he were willing to answer such questions as might be propounded to him, and he replied that he was. Mr. Matthews then requested that in so refusing Anderson set the Committee at defiance.

Senator WADE then stated that, in the absence of Mr. Sherman, the Committee had no power to punish for contempt, and he therefore moved that the Committee adjourn subject to the call of the Chairman. The motion was agreed to, and the Committee accordingly adjourned.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEE.

The Committee resumed its sittings on the 31st. Mr. Morrison presiding, in the absence of Mr. Potter.

Capt. Thomas A. Jones testified that, in 1876, he held the office of Deputy United States Marshal, and resided in East Feliciana Parish. Republicans in that parish had determined that they would not vote—to register on account of intimidation. Hon. R. McMillan called to testify in relation to payment being given on the part of Sen'r Sherman to Anderson. He had not been informed of it by Anderson. As he had stated writing it, he had to consult in relation to the matter, and had confidential affairs in fact Louisiana before the committee, and consulted with Anderson in relation to which the objection was withdrawn and Mr. Jones was then sworn. Mr. Jones said that Anderson said was and swore to the proofs which he had sent to Anderson stating $2,000 for the letter. Anderson and Mr. Hugh J. Campbell, and swear to it. Witness promised him he would forward to him the money. Witness was absent when Anderson was receiving him to forward to him the money. The Money and Labor Questions Familiarly Explained.

Prof. Newcomb in Harpers.

ONE DOLLAR.

The first idea to which I allude is, that if anything is called a dollar by act of Congress, if every one passes and accepts it as a dollar, it must therefore have a definite and fixed value, and be for all practical purposes just as good as a gold dollar. You think, perhaps, that a dollar must be worth just one dollar, and neither more nor less; how, then, can its value be uncertain? I answer that two kinds of dollars can differ from each other in value just as much as two loaves of bread can in size and quality. You know very well, for instance, that during the past 10 years our paper dollar has been worth from 5 to 30 per cent less than the gold dollar. To explain the matter fully, I must, perhaps, be a little abstruse, and therefore ask a closer attention than I will elsewhere.

When I say that a paper dollar can have no definite and fixed value, I mean that it cannot be issued to buy you any fixed and definite quantity of the necessaries of life. Money has no value at all except for the things it will buy; you can neither eat it, drink it, nor wear it; nor can you even gain interest on it while it remains in your pocket. What you want of it is to buy things to eat, drink and wear, and the number of these things it will buy, and not the number of dollars, is the measure of its value. You would not give a fig for a pocketful of dollars if you could buy only the half of a fig with them. If this year you had supported your family on five hundred dollars, but next year it should require one thousand dollars, because, on the average, prices had doubled, people would say that the value of everything was twice as great as before. But this would be an incorrect use of language. Really the value of your dollars is only half what it was before. Please remember that this is the only sense in which I now use the word "value," and the only sense in which it has a definite, practical meaning. Dollars and all other kinds of money are worth what they will buy you to eat and wear; and measuring value by any other standard is like trying to feed a hungry man on act of Congress.

All the difficulty of this matter arises from the fact that value is something which cannot be seen nor felt. If Congress should enact that all the foot and yard measures of the country should be made of a kind of rubber which would shrink to nine inches in the course of a few months, but which were nevertheless stamped "One foot, by Act of Congress," or "One yard," as the case might be, everybody would see at a glance how ridiculous it would be to require every one to buy and sell by such measures. If a man should boast of having grown a foot and a-half in the course of a year, because last year he measured only five feet, while with the new India-rubber measures he was now six feet and a-half by Act of Congress, his neighbors would laugh at him. The fact that everybody might call the new rubber measures one foot, and might buy and sell by them, would not, in the view of any sensible man, make them as long as the old foot rules.

The reason that these India rubber measures would look so much more ridiculous than similar dollars is simply that their deficiency in length is obvious to the eye, whereas the depreciation of the dollar is not obvious. In reality, calling a thing one dollar and legalizing it as such no more makes it the equivalent of a gold dollar, or of anything else in value, than calling it a foot long, no matter what its real length may be. But we cannot see or feel the depreciation of the dollar as we would see the shortening of the foot measure. We become aware of it only by the general rise of prices, and the general increase in the cost of living. This rise of prices, however, proves the depreciation in the same way that the little man measuring six feet six in his stockings would prove that the foot rule with which he was measured was too short.

If, now, the reader will hereafter remember that "dollar" is only a word, not a thing; that calling a thing a dollar does not change its nature, and does not make it worth twenty-three grains of gold, any more than calling a piece of paper a horse, and having it declared and stamped a horse by act of Congress, would make it draw a carriage—if, I say he will permanently remember this, he will have taken the first great step toward comprehending the funniest question.

In no part of Charlevoix County can be found better results of labor and skill than are found along this road. We passed the farms of John Vaughan and Daniel Maville, with about every acre of their clearings growing under abendant crops. Further along we came upon the clearings of Rice and Charles Chaddock, every spot upon which speaks loudly in praise of the energy and skill of their owners. The Chaddocks have each about fifty acres clearing, and all bearing luxurious crops. The farms of John Kinney, Oliver Hart and Delos Pratt were passed further on, and looked well. A. B. Steele and Fowler Steele are upon farms where twelve years of labor have left unmistakable marks. We passed a well cleared farm, surrounded by a neat board fence, which we were told belonged to A. E. Hayes, of Advance. At Advance we called upon Newton & Tyler, A. E. Hayes, and our old friend Harvey Porter. Our journey across the peninsula had the effect of fixing in our mind firmer than ever the opinion that, as Grand Traverse is truly the garden of Michigan, so Charlevoix County is the garden of Grand Traverse. We saw grain and grass that stood as high as our head, while bending under its burden of ripening seed. We saw school houses and well improved roads—in short all the essential elements of a good farming locality.

THE Democratic State Convention met at Lansing on the 10th according to call, and nominated O. M. Barnes, of Lansing, for Governor. A hard money platform was adopted by a two thirds majority. The convention was much more harmonious than was anticipated.

CANADIAN PRESS ASSOCIATION EXCURSION.—The propeller Empire State called here Friday evening on her way to Chicago. This trip of the Empire State was the occasion of an excursion of the Canadian Press Association to Chicago, and, calling at Charlevoix, the editors first of all paid their compliments to the SENTINEL office. We were out, but one of the typo-editors of the Association put the following greeting in type and left it upon the case:

Canada to Charlevoix, greeting:

May your smart little town continue to prosper, and the SENTINEL grow fat as years increase—long may it guard the public weal.

Forever may the Eagle soar aloft, in peace and harmony fraternizing with the Lion, and God save the Queen!

To every word of which we add a hearty "So mote it be!" The party was made up of the following ladies and gentlemen, as put in type also by one of the editors:

Canadian Press Association and Ladies.—Name of the parties—Jas. Innes and wife, of the "Mercury," Guelph; W. H. Climie, and wife, "Statesman," Bowmanville; J. H. Trayes and wife, "Times," Port Hope; E. Dickson, wife and daughter, "Era," Newmarket, Jas. Shannon, "News," Kingston; H. Hough, "World," Colborne; W. Graham and wife, "Gazette," Hackhill, and others.

Before the Empire State took in her lines to depart we learned of the presence of the Association, and hastened to pay our editorial compliments. We found a number of gentlemen who had thrown off the restraint of the sanctum, and were out to enjoy themselves as only editors can upon such an occasion. Their evenings while upon the lake are spent in the discussion of editorial topics. Fun and business are ingeniously intermingled by the quill-drivers, making the excursion the very perfection of enjoyment. Accommodations for one hundred were secured on the steamer, but the Orange troubles in Canada prevented many from participating. As the steamer backed out from the pier the editors gave three lusty cheers for the SENTINEL, and the last sound we heard from our Canadian fraters was their voices united in the notes of "Auld Lang Syne." Long life to the Canadian Press Association."

A fine stock of new clothing to arrive on Thursday at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

THE two orators who lately favored Charlevoix people with their views on finance and other things, undertook to make us believe that value has been destroyed by burning up greenbacks after redemption. What foolishness! And they had also somewhat to say about history—French history especially—in support of their theories. In doing this they should be careful to quote unwritten history, for people here can read and understand for themselves. The fact is that the French financial history which they quote proves exactly the opposite of what they claim it proves. Let America avoid results like those which followed the Assignat. The nation should meet its obligations as individuals should, in money worth just as much as when the obligations were assumed. For that reason a paper currency interchangeable at all times with coin is the best, because it fluctuates the least. The debtor then knows that when his debt is due it will cost him no more to pay it, and the creditor rests satisfied that when he receives his pay it will be worth just the same as the money he gave. The volume of money is of minor consequence. The stability of its value or purchasing power is the chief thing to be considered. The greenback orators and journals would have us believe that this "fiat money" will relieve us of all existing distresses. If this be true why not go farther and give every citizen a wheel-barrow load of it? It costs nothing but the printing. But we think Charlevoix county will put herself upon record for honest money.

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

On the morning of the 25th, four large boilers in the Chesapeake Nail Works at Harrsburg, Pa., exploded with tremendous force, killing the foreman, seriously injuring four of the workmen and demolishing the building.

It has been recently decided in New York that a note, whether accommodation paper or not, in vault if discounted or purchased at a higher rate than 7 per cent.

The Wisconsin State Editorial Convention, at its recent session in Madison, elected Sam Bowles, of the Springfield Republican, President; E. D. Coe, of the Whitewater Register, Secretary; and David Atwood, of the Janesville Gazette, Treasurer.

A TELEGRAM from Silver City, Idaho, on the 25th, says the advance troops of Gen. Howard attacked the hostiles, on the 23d, forty miles from Murray, at Curry Creek. Col. Robbins and two soldiers were killed. It was thought the hostile Indians had met with a severe repulse.

A TELEGRAM from Washington, on the 27th, says the coinage of standard silver dollars since the passage of the Resumption law act had amounted to about $5,500,000—an average of a little more than $2,000,000 a month. The mints were closed for the annual settlement, but would be reopened on the 5th of July, after which the silver-dollar coinage would be about $4,000,000 a month. About $1,000,000 in silver had been exported from San Francisco to China during the preceding two months.

A SILVER CITY (Idaho) telegram of the 27th says the report about upon the Indians at Curry Creek resulted in a victory over the hostiles, several of whom were killed, the remainder fleeing in disorder. The hostile number bered about 1,500, the assailants about 500. Further fighting was expected. Gen. Howard had arrived on the ground.

THE annual rowing-match between crews from Harvard and Yale Colleges took place at New London, Conn., on the 28th, the former winning in 20 min., 48 5-6 sec. The course was four straight miles, and they were less than a minute ahead of the Yale crew.

ON the morning of the 28th ult., the passenger train going south on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad was thrown from the track just north of Neenah, Wis., and the engineer, James Davis, was fatally and the fireman, A. L. Cate, seriously injured. The engine and one car were totally wrecked. It is thought a broken rail caused the disaster.

DURING the six months ending June 30, the failures in New York City numbered 584, with liabilities aggregating $20,683,795, and assets of $10,020,000.

THE Centennial anniversary of the Revolutionary Battle of Monmouth was celebrated at Freehold, N. J., on the 28th ult. The cornerstone for a granite soldiers' Monument to the names of New Jersey soldiers killed in the Revolutionary War was laid.

THE Metropolitan police force at East St. Louis, Ill., which several months ago was obnoxiously to an edict of the Mayor, have maintained their position, holding possession of an engine-house and the police headquarters. On the 30th ult., Mayor Bowman's force of Civic Marshals attempted to surprise them and capture the building, but were beaten back by the Metropolitans entrenched therein, and Deputy Marshals Neville and O'Connor were instantly killed and another named Werner was mortally wounded. The Marshals then retired. Sheriff Weber was sent for by the Mayor and arrested two of the Metropolitans, Malvaney and Glover. The law under which the Metropolitans claimed to act as the police of the city has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, but the force has some way managed to exist, and conflicts more or less serious have, of almost daily occurrence, for a long time, between them and the force organized by the Mayor under the city ordinance.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

S. ANGIER CHACE, the defaulting Treasurer of the Falls River (Mass.) Mills, pleaded guilty to embezzlement, on the 26th, and was sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment in the State Prison.

THE Republican State Convention of Illinois was held at Springfield, on the 26th. Gen. J. C. Smith was nominated for State Treasurer, and James P. State for Superintendent of Public Instruction. Resolutions were adopted declaring fidelity to the principles and patriotism of the Republican party, and that the Democratic party cannot be safely intrusted with the administration of the affairs of the Government; indorsing the financial system created by the Republican party during the war; opposing any further contraction of the greenback currency, and favoring such currency as can be maintained at par with and convertible into coin at the will of the holder, and that such currency be received for import duties; declaring that the permanent pacification of the Southern section of the Union and the complete protection of all its citizens in all their civil, political, personal and property rights, is a duty to which the party stands sacredly pledged, and for which purpose it placed the recent amendments in the Constitution of the United States; favoring the amendment of the criminal code by providing for the punishment of dishonest bank managers; and declaring that those who preserved the country should govern it.

THE Ohio Democracy held their State Convention at Columbus on the 26th. A platform was adopted renewing pledges of devotion to the Union and the Constitution with amendments, declaring for home rule; the supremacy of civil over military power; separation of Church and State; equality of all citizens before the law; absolute acquiescence in the last fifteen amendments; opposition to all subsidies; the preservation of the public lands for actual settlers, and the maintenance and protection of the common school system; that while the decision of the Forty-fourth Congress as to the Presidential controversy was final, that decision ought not to preclude authentic investigation and exposure of all frauds connected with that election; that the commercial and industrial stagnation, and the consequent wide-spread want and suffering throughout the country, are due to the pernicious financial legislation of the Republican party; demanding the repeal of the Resumption act; the free coinage of silver; the gradual substitution of legal-tender paper for National bank notes, and its permanent reestablishment as the sole paper money of the country, receivable for all Government dues. The gradual extinction of the public debt, etc., etc. David R. Page was nominated for Secretary of State, and A. F. Hume for Supreme Judge.

IN a card, published on the 29th ult., Congressman Acklen denounces as a willful lie the recent attack upon his character, and relieves Gen. Rosser from the authorship of the slander. He says that previous to and after the pretended occurrence he had the honor of seeing the lady to his wife, which offer she declined, and that his attentions were continued at her request.

HON. SYDNEY BREESE, for many years Judge of the Supreme Court of Illinois, and formerly United States Senator from that State, died in Pinckneyville, Ill., on the night of the 27th. He was seventy-three years old.

A CHASE COUNTY (Ill.) Grand Jury has indicted them-John M. Arther, railroad master of Chicago, and A. K. Walton, ex-Treasurer of Hyde Park, for embezzlement.

FOREIGN.

A DESPATCH from Berlin, on the 25th, says the Turks had declared that they would not evacuate the fortresses until the Treaty of Peace had been ratified by all the Powers. It was reported in London, on the 28th, that Russia had ordered Montenegro and Servia to arrange a compromise with Austria relative to their claims. A Vienna telegram of the same date says Russia had given her consent that the boundaries of Roumelia should be the Aigean Sea or the approach to the Salonica, dependent on the cession of Varna and the rest of the quadrilateral to Bulgaria.

THE Mark Lane (London) Express of the 26th says that the situation of the cereal crops in England was highly critical. With the exception of France, where the wheat plant had suffered almost as much as in England, Continental advices promised a fair average yield, but in Eastern Russia thousands of acres of grain had been cut to pieces by a succession of unusually heavy hailstorms.

THE British army contingent has been ordered back to India, and Berlin dispatches of the 28th say this order confirmed the opinion that peace was certain.

QUEEN MERCEDES, the newly-wedded wife of Alfonso, King of Spain, died at Madrid, on the 26th. She was greatly beloved and will be deeply mourned.

THE Athens telegram of the 27th says Greece had concluded a loan in Paris of $10,000,000. Fighting had been going on for three days at Apecotona.

A DESPATCH, received in London on the morning of the 30th, from Theopia, reports that about twenty obscure persons had been arrested suspected of complicity in a conspiracy in favor of Cristina Murat. The party opposed to the present Sultan appeared to be gaining strength, and 15,000 fresh troops had been summoned to Constantinople.

AT the sitting of the Congress, on the 26th, Prince Gortschakoff, who had to be carried there owing to his feeble condition, made a speech in which he and his colleagues had granted concessions in the name of Russia far surpassing what she had thought of asking. He was far too well aware of the feelings which actuated his colleagues in raise objections to such concessions, he merely wished to state that Russia made those sacrifices from a desire for peace, and that she had no narrow or selfish aim. Lord Beaconsfield acknowledged, in the name of the Congress, that a desire for peace actuated Russia, and hoped the same sentiment would continue.

IN the European Congress, on the 26th ult., it was decided, in accordance with the proposal of the British Plenipotentiaries, to intrust to Austria the task of occupying Bosnia and Herzegovina in the interest of the peace of Europe. The proposal of the French Plenipotentiaries that Europe should refuse to recognize the independence of Servia unless Servian claims were relieved from private disabilities was unanimously adopted. It was also decided to appoint a Commission to examine into the question of the aggrandizement of Servia.

A BELGRADE dispatch of the 30th ult. says the proposed Austrian occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina has not caused universal uneasiness in Servia, and military preparations continued.

EX-PRESIDENT AND MRS. GRANT have reached Berlin, and during the week ending on the 28th ult received many attentions from both Government and people.

A BERLIN dispatch of the 30th ult. says the Emperor Wilhelm had fully decided to abdicate.

AT Paris, a few days ago, the gold medal of the French Geographical Society was presented to Henry M. Stanley, the explorer, in the presence of a brilliant assemblage.

THE annual report of the Board of Health of the District of Columbia shows that while twenty-five years ago Washington could scarcely enumerate 50,000 persons, to-day it reckons 165,000, and ranks as twelfth in the list of great cities. The rate of mortality among the negroes is positively alarming when compared to the rate among the whites, the latter being 18.27 per cent., the former 44.56. Unhealthy location and residences account for this partially.

A NEW YORK paper finds that 1,264 different languages are spoken in America. No wonder a husband does not always understand when asked for a new dress.

IT is the style to wear a large bouquet in the belt.

THE INVESTIGATION.

THE cross-examination of Mrs. Jenks was resumed, on the 25th. Witness tangantly informed the Committee that she had not received the letters called for on Thursday, and doubted whether they would be thought of much importance. She had seen Mrs. Welker before she left for Washington, and that lady informed her that she would endeavor to get all the letters. Witness had received about half a dozen letters from her, and was hopeful that the remainder would be forthcoming. Mrs. Jenks then proceeded to read the letters called for on the following day, if they arrived, which was the case.

Mr. Bingham was recalled and stated that the three last letters produced from that Anderson was in possession of political secrets of the highest import, and that Anderson regarded the publication of the Supreme Bench. Mr. Harlan would witness to that, and if Mr. Harlan was unavailable, as he must of course be would state that Judge Bingham thought it his duty to go to New Orleans and visited in bringing about a settlement of the unhappy condition of affairs there, the transaction would probably help him to the Supreme Court bench. On this basis counsel from New Orleans witness told him he had been unable to find out definitely from Packard whether he was a candidate or not, but thought if he was he could probably bring it to would accept it. Mr. Harlan had said to witness that he knew of no money being used to bribe on the Packard Legislature.

Dr. Sargent, of Iowa, was next and testified that he had conversed with James E. Anderson of the contents of the letters read. He identified Anderson, and stated positively that he would be compelled to resist a subpœna to appear before the Committee. The statement surprised and disappointed witness, who thought he could have induced him to come. Where he would not come. Anderson had written him a letter on the subject of the protest that Anderson had written him a letter on the subject of the protest that Anderson had written him a letter on the subject of the protest that

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, July 12, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Since my last letter the American eagle has for the 102d time flapped those tireless wings of his, and given Ohio all prevailing screech over the doings of 1776. Some one has suggested—and its not such a bad suggestion, either—that 100 years is about long enough for a grown-up nation to crow boisterously over its getting out of leading strings. It is a fair question, at least, whether it is entirely dignified for a country which has attained an unquestioned place among the great powers of the world to keep on year after year yelling, banging and throwing up its hat, as crazy with boyish enthusiasm as when it was eighty or ninety years younger, and all because we are not somebody else's colony. I don't want to be thought a scoffer at a proper and established order of things, and I don't want to be put out of the synagogue for want of patriotism; but I must say that our present Fourth of July hullabaloo reminds me more and more of the performance of some old gentleman who should set apart a day each year for standing on his head, shooting off a finger or so, and getting blind drunk, to commemorate his having been fished out of the river when a youngster, or to celebrate the day when he got his first pair of boots.

But, happily for the fire-cracker men and the rising generation, I am in a hopeless minority on this question, and Thursday was devoted to the usual noisy demonstrations; not so noisy as usual in the city proper however, for the authorities very sensibly refused this year to suspend the ordinance against the various preparations of gunpower. There were, of course, numerous violations of the ordinance, but no the whole the city was more quiet than it previous years. But outside the jurisdiction of our worthy Aldermen the din was undiminished, and the suburbs were largely resorted to by those whose patriotic frenzy refused to be curbed by the rules of the municipality.

The terrific weather of the past week drove hundreds of thousands to the ocean's edge, and Coney Island, Manhattan Beach, Rockaway and the other favorite resorts were crowded with pleasure seekers, who reveled in the bit of cool air there vouchsafed them. There seemed to be considerable enjoyment of the day despite the heat, and the reported casualties were unusually few in number.

The afternoon was doubly enlivened by a cooling rain and the bulletin from London which told how nobly the American oarsmen were working to sustain the national reputation for muscle and skill. The wonderful Michiganders, with the jaw breaking name, were the subject of many admiring encomiums from lovers of the sport. The despatches of the next day, however, were even more welcome to New Yorkers, as they chronicled the victory of our Columbia College boys over the Hertford crew. American rowing will be regarded with increased respect in England as the result of this regatta.

Bulletins from Paris give us numerous additional descriptions of the prominent displays made by American manufacturers; and it is curious to note how evidently the reports carried back to Europe by visitors to our Centennial, where practically for the first time the world took astonished cognizance of the extent of American ingenuity and skill, have stimulated European curiosity to examine American wares. Correspondents write that the leading exhibits from the U. S. are constantly surrounded by eager crowds who, as a rule, take no pains to conceal their admiration and surprise. France for instance, is the home of the harmonium or reed organ manufacture, and the French have supposed themselves to lead the world in this industry, but they are now forced to admit that the American Organs, as represented by the magnificent collection of instruments from the factory of Estey & Co., which are there shown are superior in variety, tone and noticeably in richness of appearance, to anything their home factories can produce. The Estey establishment has for years had a very heavy foreign business to which the impression they are now making upon the cosmopolitan throng that daily surges through the Champs de Mars will give a new and considerable impetus.

The hot weather having closed most of the theatres, except the half dozen little dives where the auditor wears his hat, drinks beer and watches the performance in constant dread of a raid by the police, that large fraction of New York, which may be called its "amusement population," has to look elsewhere for entertainment. And so there comes along just in the nick of time a wonderful marksman who draws crowds to watch him perform impossibilities with powder and lead. The name of this new wonder is Carver—Dr. Carver of San Francisco; though, why he is called "Dr." is more than I can tell, unless it is on account of the facility with which he could kill people if he wished to. There is certainly nothing of the M. D. in his appearance. Dressed in ultra-western costume, with flannel shirt and leather belt, his hair flowing down over his shoulders from beneath his big sombrero, a la Buffalo Bill and Texas Jack, (by the latter of which bloodthirsty worthies he is accompanied) the great rifleman looks much more like the conventional dime novel hero than like the peaceful professor of healing that his title would indicate.

On the fourth Carver gave a grand exhibition of his powers at the Brooklyn driving park. I am almost afraid to submit my general reputation for truth and veracity to the strain of telling what he did, but I must risk instancing a few of his feats. His sole weapon is a repeating rifle which shoots twenty shots without reloading. He commenced by shooting glass balls thrown into the air some 40 feet away. Of these he broke 100 in about three minutes. Then Texas Jack began throwing trade dollars for targets, and these were unerringly bored by the doctor's bullets. One of the coins thrown was Mexican dollar, and as it rose into the air some one called out to him to cut out the liberty cap which adorns its face. No sooner said than done; for when the silver was picked up a moment later the cap was found to have been cut out as though with a chisel. For an hour all sorts of little articles were sent upward and nine-tenths of them knocked to flinders by the magical marksman.

Nothing like this shooting has ever before been seen. Capt. Bogardus is great with his shot gun, but Carver duplicates all his performances, and more too, with "the weapon of the plains."

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson was seventy-two years old, on the 25th of May.

—Edison was married in 1873 to Miss Mary Stilwell, of Newark, N.J. They have two children—a little boy four years old and a little girl aged two—nicknamed "Dot" and "Dash," after the characters in the Morse alphabet.

—The widow of Bahnemann, the founder of homeopathy, died recently at the age of seventy-eight years at the house in the Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, Paris, which had for a long time been her residence.

—Mrs. Hayes has sent a portrait of herself to the Philadelphia Kindergarten, which she visited recently, with this inscription: "May I ask, through you, the privilege of saying good morning to our little friends of the Kindergarten? Lucy W. Hayes."

—Mr. Mosely the other day praised a fine farm near New Haven, whereupon one of the Evangeline's friends said admiringly, a Connecticut gentleman named Trowbridge, offered to buy it for him if he would live there. Mr. Mosely declined the offer.

—Jessie Benton Fremont is said to be as attractive a woman in old age as she was in youth and in her prime. Her abundant hair is white as snow, her complexion is fresh, her features are unchanged, and her hand is sought by sculptors as a model.

—If Livy we have only thirty-five out of 142 books. Thirty out of thirty-four books of Tacitus have been lost to us. Quintilian's greatest work was lost. Varro wrote the lives of 700 illustrious Romans. Hitius composed another on the actions of great men among the Romans. These works were enriched with portraits, and have disappeared.

—Another "learned blacksmith" has arisen. This one's name is Thomas W. Bowditch, and he is employed in an ax shop at Johnsonville, Rensselaer County, N.Y. He has written many essays upon the various agricultural implements, combs, bells and other articles in common daily use, tracing their history from Bible origin to the present time. His writings are said to have attracted much attention from literary people, especially those who delight in antiquities.

—The great value of the estate of the late Mark Hopkins, of California, has proved embarrassing. His wife, in her petition for letters of administration, places the value of the estate at $10,000,000. Two londsmen were required by law, who must qualify in twice the value of the estate, or $20,000,000 each. Leland Stanford and Charles Crocker testified that, in their opinion, outside of railroad interests, the value of the estate was $8,000,000. The difficulty of requiring so enormous bonds was obviated by depositing in the Bank of California all the railroad bonds. An administratrix bond was then executed for the remaining property, with Stanford and Crocker as sureties, each qualifying in the sum of $10,000,000.

Lessons from Bryant's Life.

It has been truly said that with some men the sooner you cease to talk about them after they die, the better for themselves and the world. But the life and career of William Cullen Bryant, just closed, was not of that order. His character will bear inspection, and his virtues are eminently worthy of commemoration. We wish only to call attention to three points which, among many others, are legitimately deducible.

And first, Bryant's life bears unqualified testimony to the practical value of hygienic rules in living. It was but a short time ago that the then venerable octogenarian gave an account of his personal habits at the request of a friend, and all who read that account must have been forcibly impressed with their regularity and simplicity. Although a full, stout, heavy man, and engaged for the greater part of his time in steady brain-labor, yet his diet was simple, almost to abstemiousness, and his physical exercise varied and generous. However it may have been with him in earlier years, his later days were marked by a most rigid and careful attention to what he considered to be the laws of health. While it does not follow by any means that, because Bryant exercised with dumb-bells an hour and then bathed before breakfast, therefore every other man should do the same or expect to die prematurely, yet his temperance, his moderation, his care for his physical welfare, and his regular, simple habits, are at least worthy of notice and consideration by all who hope for longevity, good health, and full, physical vigor.

Again, Bryant's life does not favor the idea that there is any innate incompatibility between the possession of true poetic taste and what is called practical talent or good, sound, common sense in the affairs of every-day life. The notion is about exploded, happily, that because one is a poet and a man of letters he of strong literary proclivities, therefore he must be a little the wild and visionary in ideas and faculties, must dress oddly, rave once in a while, sit up nights, and possess a total inaptness for anything like prosaic, matter-of-fact business details. Bryant, as a matter of many eminent sense, as a good, practical financier and business manager, as an editor and statesman, at least in thought, will be remembered just as long and favorably as Bryant, the author of "Thanatopsis," and the translator of Homer's "Iliad." It has been held by some that the cast of mind necessary to the production of literature is intrinsically disqualified for active business pursuits, that because Uuderdge and Wordsworth together did not have practical ability enough to get a collar on the neck of a horse, but had to be told by a servant, and because Byron, Shelley, Goldsmith and some others were eminently identistic and antimundane in mental temperament, therefore all literary men must necessarily be the same. But the career of Sir Walter Scott, Fitz-Greene Halleck, Bryant and a score of others equally sensible and business-like in their views upon practical matters, show that such a rule of judgment would have as many brilliant exceptions as regular examples. It is true that Bryant's muse was not at all of the fanciful order, but more sedate and clerical than gay, dashing and lively, more given to solemn or weighty themes than light and sparkling topics, more endued with grandeur and sublime pathos than crackling and phosphorescent wit or satire, yet it will be long before the English language contains a better specimen of blank verse than "Thanatopsis" or the "Hymn to Nature." Indeed, Bryant will take his place in the literary Pantheon by the side of Thomson and Cowper as one of the few great and genuine poets of Nature. His love for natural scenery and objects, particularly in their grave and quiet aspects, and his sympathy with the majestic solitude of deep forests, was most intense and subtle, and yet most profound and winning.

Lastly, Bryant's life is hardly corroborative of the notion sometimes entertained that precocity in intellectual development is something desirable. In one sense it can scarcely be called complimentary or creditable for a man to live to the age of eighty-four years and be constantly engaged in literary work and yet have produced his finest thought, structure at the early age of nineteen. It would seem that unremitting knowledge and experience should have stirred him to nigher and bolder reaches of fancy, and to the expression of diverse and nobler sentiments than those which thronged his mind in the immature period of youth; but in his case it was years they did not. As a whole, however, his life and career are such as every American can point to with pride, and votes it as just the kind of life and that colossal frame stood still, this Nation lost one of its purest-minded citizens and best thinkers.—Chicago Journal.

Insects in Birds.

No subject connected with the history of birds furnishes more interesting material for study than that of instinct. Young birds of different species show that they have very different degrees of instinctive knowledge. Some are able to take the entire care of themselves and do not need a mother to watch over them; others, on the contrary, are perfectly helpless, and need teaching before they can do anything for themselves, except breathe and swallow what is put into their mouths. The young chicken, a short time after it leaves the egg, knows how to take care of itself nearly as well as does the year-old bird. It can run after its mother, use its eyes, pick up food and answer the call of the old hen; and it does all this without instruction. How different it is in all these respects from the young hirundo swallow! This is blind, and unable to run, or even to stand, knowing only enough to open its mouth when it hears the old bird return to the nest, and to swallow the food placed in its open throat. Far from knowing by instinct how to use its wings, as the young chick does its legs, it does not learn this until it is well grown, and has had several lessons in flying; and even then it flies badly, and improves only after long practice. After it has learned to fly, it is still very helpless and lazy-like, and very different from the active, bright-eyed, independent little chick or the dainty-shod, graceful, timid, yet fearless guinea-hen, indeed, the young of all the Insessores, or scratching birds, such as the hen, the quail, the partridge, the pheasant and the turkey.

The scratching birds are not the only ones which can take care of themselves at an early age. This is true of the running birds, such as the ostrich, and the same is the case with many of the wading birds, such as the sandpiper. And among the swimming birds, there are several kinds that take full care of themselves soon after leaving the shell.

Far from standing in any need of instruction, young ducks take to the water by instinct, even when they have been brought up by a hen; and they know that they are perfectly safe upon it, although the anxious hen tries in every way to restrain them and to bring them back.

There are many ways in which some of our young birds show their really wonderful instincts; but there is nothing more curious in this respect than the habits of the little chickens, which most of us have opportunities of noticing—if we choose to take the trouble. These little creatures, almost as soon as they are born, understand what their mother "clucks" meaning, and know that they must hide when a hawk is about; they often scratch the ground for food before they see their mother or any other chicken do so; they are careful not to catch bees instead of flies; and they show their early smartness in many ways which are well worth watching.

But, sometimes, a brood of these youngsters find something that puzzles them, as when they meet with a handsome shelled beetle, who looks too big to eat and yet too small for a playmate.—Prof. W. K. Brooks, in St. Nicholas for July.

A MAN must necessarily keep his word when no one will take it.

The Mocking-Bird.

During the hot spell I remove my writing materials to the front porch overlooking the lake, and a neighbview of shining water, broken by islands of oak, hickory, magnolia and the tar-line of crawling coast, with tree-tranks visible in the deep air, two miles away. Try to distinguish such objects across the Ohio, at Cincinnati, against a dark mass of foliage, and slight background. There are mocking-birds nested in the orange-trees all about me, who keep up a constant medley of song. One fellow, especially, likes to perch on the castle's topmost peak and sing his very heart out. My appearance on the porch this morning was a signal for a rauticous shout among them, for these birds learn to know you like their voices, as well as any primo donne at Springer Hall. One voice I distinguished, particularly, by the rapidity with which its trouladay ran from one to another; wren, thrush, linnet, chick, partridge, were all run together in a marvelous phantasy of notes. As the hearing of one ear is slightly affected, I was at a loss to get his position, and stepped from the porch to see if he was on his favorite perch by the fen great and genuine poets of Nature. His love for natural scenery and objects, particularly in their grave and quiet aspects, and his sympathy with the majestic solitude of deep forests, was most intense and subtle, and yet most profound and winning.

Lastly, Bryant's life is hardly corroborative of the notion sometimes entertained that precocity in intellectual development is something desirable. In one sense it can scarcely be called complimentary or creditable for a man to live to the age of eighty-four years and be constantly engaged in literary work and yet have produced his finest thought, structure at the early age of nineteen. Another Wonderful Cave in Kentucky.

Another wonderful cave has recently been discovered in Glasgow Junction, Ky. It has already been explored for a distance of twenty-three miles in one direction, called the long route, and sixteen miles in another direction, called the short route. The avenues are very wide; a span of horses can easily be driven through it in most places, and eleven miles. Three rivers, wide and very deep, are encountered on the long route. One of them is navigable for fourteen miles, until the channel becomes too narrow to admit a boat. This forms the third or river route, which has not been explored in a boat.

The cave is wonderful beyond description, and far surpasses in grandeur the Mammoth or any cave hitherto discovered. Several mummified remains have been discovered in one of the large rooms. They were reposing in stone coffins, rudely constructed, and, from appearances, may have been in this cave for centuries. They present every appearance of the Egyptian mummies.

Great excitement prevails over this very important discovery. Mr. Hyde, of Mortimore, of Chestnut street, Louisville, Ky., purchased three of the mummies and took them into his possession. Maj. George M. Proctor, of Glasgow Junction, Ky., purchased the remainder of the mummies from the owner of the cave, Thomas Kelley. The latter is, or rather was, a few days ago, a very poor man, struggling to make a payment on a farm of twenty-four acres, upon which, by mere accident, the entrance to this wonderful cave was discovered. He obtained about $400 for the mummies, and is now offered $10,000 cash for the cave.

The entrance to the cave is within two miles of Glasgow Junction, and one two minutes' walk from the depot. The surface is very much broken, full of great elevations and depressions, and everything to indicate that there were volcanic eruptions or violent upheavals of the earth at some period.

The newly-discovered cave has been named the Grand Crystal Cave, and is as beautiful as its name implies. Ladies and bridges are being constructed, and Mr. J. B. Puckett, a capitalist of the town, announces his intention of having a steamboat constructed expressly for the purpose of navigating its wonderful rivers.—Dispatch to the Cincinnati Commercial.

Terrible Result of an Insect's Bite.

Daniel Weluer, a boy, sixteen years of age, met a strange death yesterday. A wound no larger than a pin-point did the mischief and caused an indescribable agony most intense, preliminary to the final result. On Sunday last he was one of a crowd who sought comfort at Union Park, and, like many others he lay upon the grass until quite a late hour at night. He felt no fatal result, but went to his home, No. 816 Allen avenue, and slept soundly till morning. He worked all day Monday, and toward evening began to experience a sharp pain on the right side of his face, near the right eye. A close examination revealed a very small inflamed spot under the eye, and in a few hours the inflammation extended downward to the neck, causing great swelling. He suffered much that night, and by morning was terribly disfigured. Becoming alarmed, he visited Dr. Hausman, who at once discovered that the case was a serious one of poisoning by the sting of some insect. He called Dr. T. E. Holland, and, after a consultation, they used every effort to reduce the inflammation and correct the state of the blood, although satisfied that the boy could not be saved. The poison gradually crept through his system till it rendered him a frightful object, his head being three times its natural size, and blood and pus issuing from mouth, nose and ears. At four o'clock on Friday afternoon he died. Of course, it was impossible to determine what kind of an insect stung him, but it seems probable that he received the sting at the park.—St. Louis Republican.

A Remarkable Lion Story.

These superb animals have never formed part of any menagerie, and have retained all their terrible savageness. It is a hunter, and not a tamer, who accompanies them. Macomo, a large, powerful negro of Central Africa, made himself master of these beautiful animals in the following manner: He had been informed of the nightly presence of a lion in his neighborhood. He set a snare armed with a big noose, and, dragging a young ox after him, arrived at the appointed place. At the usual hour the lion broke his leg by slipping on a piece of orange-peel, and eventually died from the effects of the accident. Then broke he leg by slipping on a piece of orange-peel, and eventually died from the effects of the accident. This effected his mind and led to his splendid occupation for the rest of his life.

The meal all the money they could put forward it to her, so that she could pay off the obligation. The Emily Weaver brought home a modest $10 till Aunt Malala whipped her out of the house, upbraiding her as a disgrace to the family for doing such picayune plundering, while her cousin Carrie had brought home ten times as much. Then Emily undertook to poison her master, to secure more money, but was found out and lodged in jail.—Chicago Tribune.

—A few days ago, a young lady was robbed of her pocket-book on one of the streets of New York by a man whom she pursued several squares and finally captured. When captured, the thief threw all that he had carried, and in reply to her question why he took it, said: "I have a wife and two children to keep, and I committed the theft in a spirit of desperation." His looks and manner seemed to verify his words. The young lady said: "If that is true, take me to your home and I will forgive you." He did, and she found every word that he had told her true. The evidences of absolute poverty was so conclusive that she opened her pocket-book and divided its contents with the man. He was subsequently arrested for committing the theft, but she refused to appear against him.

—A few mornings ago three boys were held in bail in New York, for placing a large stone on the down town track of the New York Elevated Railroad, near Rector street, with intent to upset a train. The boys had considered that the interlacing braces of the pillars which support the track formed an excellent substitute for a ladder, on which they could climb up on the track. A bright idea dawned on them. It was four to one that they fell down and have the fun of seeing a whole train of cars jump off the track and be dashed to kingdom-come. Seventeenth street, Second avenue were put in an old pair of trousers and laid across one of the rails. A Belgian paving-block was also wedged between the guard-rails to kick defend the track. By the time this work had been accomplished an engine with five cars drew up on the track in good speed, and the boys scrambled off to a wooden awning all disappeared through a window, not waiting to see the result of their experiment. Fortunately the train held the track, though it thumped alarmingly over the big stone. The lads are all under eleven years of age, and they presented a picture of woe when brought into court.

Air Monsters.

There was a time, and that not very long ago, when accounts of the doings of creatures like the dragons of the prehistoric world existed in the calm regions of the temperate zone. There was comfort in the thought that these monsters of the air did not wander out of tropical climes. But of late years they have burst the tropics and seem to be ranging around the globe with a free wing. As fact specimens are becoming too familiar to be pleasant. They come every year, and at unaccountable times. The storm which came from the south on the 10th of April a very severe typhoon visited Canton, China, and, decreased the population by nine or ten thousand, and the houses of the city by about the same number. The path was about 600 feet in width, and left nothing living or standing in its track. It lifted great grains of sand, and buried them down to a long distance from the place of starting. It picked up boats and set them down on the housetops. It handled huge trees as if they had been straws, pulling them up, and, if they stuck stubbornly, breaking them off and using them as cudgels. Thus the typhoon whirled on, lashing and smashing all impediments in its course, and throwing rocks in wild sport at the ruins it was making. Many families were completely buried in the ruins of their houses. In one restaurant there were 100 diners and fifty-two waiters employed, and not one escaped. All were crushed to death in the jaws of the typhoon.—Missouri Republican.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—While the Rev. Dr. Penticost was preaching on eternal punishment at New Haven, the other day, he suddenly clapped his hand to his chest, called for some water, and, giving out a hymn, asked the audience to exercise him for a few minutes as he had metwith a accident. He had broken a vial of some fiery medicine in his coat pocket by a violent gesture, it seems, burning him painfully and typifying, it may be, some of that anguish which he was trying to depict in the congregation.—N. Y. Evening Post.

—A singular character has just died at Hartford, Conn. He was a man about fifty years of age and of some means, but of clouded intellect, who was every day seen upon the streets, walking with downcast eyes, carefully removing from the side walks all stray pieces of orange-peel and banana-skin. It is said that, in early life, his babymother broke her leg by slipping on a piece of orange-peel, and eventually died from the effects of the accident. This affected his mind and led to his peculiar occupation for the rest of his life.

At this season of the year many valuable cows die from what is known as the "clover bloat," and it may be well to know some simple remedy. A ph sician in Davenport, Iowa, says turpentine will cure nearly every case. One fourth of a gills an ordinary dose.

—The following is said by the Rochester Times to be an excellent remedy for burns: One ounce of pulverized borax, one quart of boiling water, half ounce of pulverized alum. Shake up well and bottle. Wrap the burn up in soft linen and keep constantly wet with the solution. Do not remove the linen until the burn is cured.

Col. R. M. Miller, a successful dairyman, feeds his cows night and morning the year round, and in each feed puts about a tablespoonful of salt. He considers this method of salting cows preferable to the usual one of giving salt-licks at one time in a week, and thinks his method adds largely to the amount of milk given.

—A novel plan for freezing grain from vermin is recommended in the Rural Home. It advises putting a living goat into the grain heap so that it cannot get out. The worms attack the crab and enter the shell, the unsuspecting dining-room his guests entered fearlessly. Then crawling noiselessly within reach of a convenient spring Macomo touched it, and his four companions suddenly found themselves imprisoned in a strong iron cage whose bars had been hidden beneath green leaves. Loud cries were near at hand to aid in removing the four lions upon a cart, and they were about to commence their long journey when they received a new lioness crouched down upon the sand and licking her whelps between the iron bars. When the men raised the cage upon the cart she looked at them beseechingly, and when they all marched on she followed at a short distance, with drooping head and fearful eyes. And thus it is that we have five lions instead of four at the Jardin des Acclimatation. The mother is fierce, ferocious beasts, ready to revolt at any moment, and although Macomo manages their cage and dominates them to a certain extent they have not yet given him for having taken advantage of their confidence in him, and would look nothing better than to treat him as lions was treated by his seven lions in the last days of the old Hippodrome—simply tear him to pieces.—Paris Correspondence Boston Advertiser.

We know daughters whose snuff-bottles are concealed in their rooms, where they use the contents constantly, without the knowledge of their parents. We have seen at boarding-schools girls go into hysterics when deprived for a day or two of their snuff, and borrow tobacco from the servants as a substitute until they could obtain their usual stimulant of Scotch or Maccaboy; and we are well acquainted with three sisters—highly respectable girls, were it not for the sallow line tarnishing their complexions—who are at present in the habit of chewing. It baulked our inquisitive curiosity to follow them home from church, and in reply to her question why he took it, said: "I have a wife and two children to keep, and I committed the theft in a spirit of desperation." His looks and manner seemed to verify his words. The young lady said: "If that is true, take me to your home and I will forgive you." He did, and she found every word that he had told her true. Borrowing Money in the West.

Borrowing money is one of the most prolific sources of distress pervading the Western country. Every farmer, almost, says: "If I had a little capital to develop the resources of my land, I could make a competency right on the high road to prosperity and wealth." In nine cases out of ten, sis would prove a delusion; even if money could be had at two to four per cent. of long terms, as a number of our intelligent correspondents sigh for; but as the case actually exists where the farmer pays twelve to fourteen per cent. the tenth case must prove as great a failure as the other nine.

The most drifty commercial business cannot survive such a drain as this. No business can pay it, and it is folly for farmers to hazard such a ruinous step. While they are found willing to risk such certain ruin, those who have money to loan will insist on having what they, with reason, term the market price of capital; and knowing that it is hazardous within the bounds of possibility for the borrower to pay such rates of interest, they make assurance doubly sure by refusing to loan more than one-third or one-fourth of what is computed to be the cash value of the property. The lender regards it a contingent expenditure of the borrower which the self-respect of every farmer should revolt at. The value of his land; the value of his personal effects and of his farm stock; his family; number of his family; and many similar inquiries he is required to answer before obtained the coveted privilege of paying an annual interest of ten per cent. for three or four years and a principal of three or four per cent. to the broker, including all costs of drawing and recording papers.

This whole business of borrowing money, as practiced by Western farmers, is servile and humiliating in practice and ruinous in results. If our notions were changed, if we, as a people, grew rich, and what they term prosperous, by borrowing from Eastern capitalists through their agents, a return could be shown on the prairies; and if they can do no more, buy five or ten cows, or put down new grass seed, plow them several times, and give them such attentions as by feeding well and sheltering in winter, and will save the increase of their stock for five years, everyone now in debt may have the means to lift his mortgage, or if fortunate in having no such incubus on his estate, he may be enabled to add more to the value of his farm in such condition as every farmer worthy the name longs to reach. Let our farmers stop this borrowing at 10 to 14 per cent. It sometimes is slow, but always certain death to hopes and prosperity. The business of the country does not justify more than 4 or 5 per cent. The Government is borrowing tens of millions at that rate. Let our farmers cease borrowing, and make haste slowly by relying upon the increase of such stock as they can pay for. Do not go the banks or calves to the butcher, but keep them as valuable animals. Live on the resources of the farm as our grandfathers and grandmothers did. Bag and baggage principles and creeds, pots and pigeon, but milk and honey were their staff. Wholesome, cheaper and better subsistutes. A wholesome beef of fresh and milk is a much better composer to refreshing sleep than a mortgage, drawing 10 or 12 per cent. interest. Set your faces like flint against borrowing. If in debt, sell half or three-fourths of your farm, and commence to get out of debt by making as a postulence. It is the principle of economy of all the misery farmers are suffering.—Kansas Farmer.

Strength of Greek Soldiers.

The physical superiority of the gallant Alexandrian Greeks to the harshest and most robust Nations of modern times is forcibly illustrated by the military statistics of Xenophon. According to the author of the "Anabasis," the combined reconnterments of a Spartan soldier, in addition to his own weight, carried by a mercenary soldier, weighed seventy-five pounds, exclusive of the camp, mining and bridge-building tools, and the rations of bread and dried meat which were issued in weekly installments and increased the burden of the infantry soldier to 90, 95, or even to full 100 pounds. This load was often carried at the rate of four English miles an hour for twelve hours per diem, day after day; and only in the burning deserts of Southern Syria the Commander of the Grecian auxiliaries thought it prudent to shorten the usual length of a day's march by one-fourth. The gymnastic tests applied by the epitactes, or recruiting officer of a proficient corps, would appear more preposterous to the uniformed exquisites of a modern "crack regiment." Even tall, well-shaped men of the soundest constitution could not pass the preliminary examination unless they were able to jump their own height vertically and thrice their own height horizontally, and twothirds of those distances in full armor; pitch a weight equal to one-third of their own to a distance of twenty yards, and throw a javelin with such dexterity that they would not miss a mark of the size of a man's head more than four out of ten times at a distance of fifty yards, beside other tests referring to their expertness in the use of the bow and the broadsword.—Popular Science Monthly.

—A startling case of poisoning has recently come to light in Pittsburgh, Pa. Several families are prostrated by drinking the milk of a cow whose udder was bitten by a snake, and eighteen persons on the parlock of the milk were taken very sick, among them the Hon. George Judge, lately Representative for the Fifth District of Allegheny County. The physician (Dr. Curtis) says Mr. Judge's daughter will probably not recover.—Telegram.

Doctors Gave Him Up.

"It is possible that Mr. Gaffney is up and at work, and cured in a manner so speedy?"

"I assure you it is true that he is entirely cured, and with nothing but Hop Bitters, and only ten days ago he looked as if he could not be cured."

"Well-sir-ly." If that is so, I will go this minute and get some for my poor George. I know hops are good."

Remember This.

That when you buy a cake of DOBBIN'S PATENT POWDER you take no chances, for it is warranted absolutely pure, full strength and full weight, and it cannot fail, if properly used, to produce the most perfect and satisfactory results; and only in August, 1878, there were forty cases, put up at this establishment, that were sold as cheap as the best.

Without a Town is not a panacea—is not a cure for everything, but is a catechism for materia medicas, and shows by its numerous laurels to its crown of glorious success. Enlarged Livers and Kidneys, aching sides, nasty basins of our lakes and rivers, are restored to their healthy and normal condition. Health and vigor follow its use, and Chills and Fever and their depraved forms are broken with Wilbor's Ague Remedy. Don't fail to try it. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston.

General Debility.

Read It!

Good May Come From It.

It is a common complaint among people of this age that they are suffering from an underlying condition of debility, which is so, how many actual diseases there are back of this condition which may mean their untimely removal. So numerous are the ills of which they complain that there is no satisfactory examination unless they were able to jump their own height vertically and thrice their own height horizontally, and twothirds of those distances in full armor; pitch a weight equal to one-third of their own to a distance of twenty yards, and throw a javelin with such dexterity that they would not miss a mark of the size of a man's head more than four out of ten times at a distance of fifty yards, beside other tests referring to their expertness in the use of the bow and the broadsword.—Popular Science Monthly.

Much important, however, is it to separate the sound from the diseased and from constitutional postures and habitudings, and to thoroughly cleanse and disinfect the latter before they are again made the basis of disease.

HIS SALE OF PAPER MONEY.

With these two items on record, we are in a proper state of mind to inquire what gives value to paper money. You know that, practically, by the greater part of the business of the world is carried on by using paper or credit instead of gold. Only an insignificant fraction of mercantile payments are made by actually counting out gold. If one merchant has to pay another a thousand dollars in gold, he simply hands him a check for the amount, which the second merchant, perhaps, passes over to some one else. Here is a piece of paper, of no value whatever in itself, passed from hand to hand just as if its value were a thousand gold dollars. How is this? Can we say with correctness that the check has any real value? The answer is clear and simple. The value does not reside in the check itself, but in the 23, 200 grains (say three pounds avoirdupois) of gold to which the holder of the check is entitled, and which he knows the bank is able and ready to pay him. That is all. If the bank is not bound to pay the check, no matter how many dollars may be marked on it, no matter how beautiful the engraving, it is worth nothing. If the check is not payable in gold, but in greenbacks, then it is worth not a thousand dollars in gold, but only in greenbacks. So it is with all "convertible" paper money of the world, which consists in such enormous quantities in place of money. Its sole basis is that responsible men are bound to pay it, and its value depends upon the weight of the gold to which it entitles the holder, no matter whether it be stamped pounds, francs, or dollars.

Observe carefully that it is not asserted that the paper "represents" so much gold or that the firm which issues it is very wealthy or powerful. The holder of the paper must have an acknowledged right to the gold, which the bank is not going to dispute. If there is any doubt whether he himself or anyone to whom he may pass the check will be able to get the gold for it, then the check will be depreciated. If it is certain that no one can ever get the gold for it its value will be just that of a pretty picture for the children to play with, no matter how strongly it may be declared to represent a thousand dollars in gold.

Now, with one single exception, which is dealt considered presently, the value of convertible paper money is determined in precisely the same way with that of uncovertible paper. In itself it has no value at all. Congress may stamp it one dollar or one hundred dollars, but unless it entitles the owner to claim some thing, it is mere piece of paper. If the owner can actually get a gold dollar with it, it is worth a gold dollar; otherwise it will be more or less depreciated in value, according to the hope of future payment, which the holders may entertain. Of course, Congress can make everyone call it a dollar and receive it under that name, but we have seen in the other lesson that this does not give it real value—that is, purchasing power. If any one is compelled to take it, he simply puts up the price of everything he has to sell in proportion to the depreciation of the paper, so that the result is the same as if the paper passed at a discount.

We must now point out a fallacy by which the supporters of the irredeemable paper money often try to get round these considerations. It is said that the greenbacks, or their proposed paper dollars, are to be loaned "on the credit of the nation," and therefore must have value in proportion to that credit, even if the nation does not redeem them.

The word "credit" is here used in some peculiar sense (which no one can fully explain) wholly different from its commercial sense. In the world of business, "credit" includes the ability and the obligation to pay all demands in cash at the bronze due. A man or a firm that cannot do this has no credit, however excellent it may be in other respects. Suppose you should be traveling in a distant city, and, going to the cashier of your hotel for change, he hands you a ten dollar bill on the banking firm of Sproul, Brothers & Co. "Are you sure this bill is good?" you inquire.

"Good as good sir. The firm of Sproul, Bro., & Co. is the greatest in this State, possessed of unbounded wealth, and its operations extend over the whole globe."

"Then," you reply, "I suppose if I take this bill to their counter, they will pay it?"

"Pay it? Why, no, sir. You would be hooted by the small boys in the street, and laughed at by Sproul's clerks. The credit of the firm is so excellent, and all its debts so well secured by real estate and bonds to such millions of dollars, that both the firm and the community considered, ten or twelve years ago, that there was not the slightest need of their redeeming their bills, and they are never going to do it."

"I don't understand that kind of credit. In my State credit proper is something which the party issuing is bound to pay when required; and if he does not pay he has no credit, no matter how rich he is."

But we claim that a firm so great, powerful and wealthy as that of Mr. Sproul need not pay.

"Well, sir," you would reply, "I don't see what difference it makes to me how wealthy Sproul's firm is, or how well their paper is secured, if I can't get any of their wealth in exchange for my bill. I always thought the advantage of having the paper of a wealthy firm was that it was surer to be paid; but, if the rich are the firm, the less the need of paying. I would rather have the bill of some smaller house."

"Ah, you know nothing about finance, I see, and I'll get you some foreign money rather than argue further with you."

If a hotel cashier should talk in this way to you, you would be a little puzzled to say whether he was joking or in earnest. And yet great statesmen do argue in just that way about our greenbacks. There are bills to the amount of $400,000,000 afloat, reading, "The United States will pay the bearer one dollar." Yet if you should take one of these bills to the Government's counter, asking that this promise be redeemed, the clerks would laugh at you. A paper or two-dime note one bill this very thing, and the newspapers ventilated the man's sanity, while a Treasury official thought he was only trying to make himself notorious. If a politician tries to justify permanent not payment, he will talk about the credit and wealth of the nation exactly as the Sproul check talked about Sproul, Brothers & Co. Now, it will be a very profitable mental exercise if the reader will ask himself what is meant by the promise, "The United States will pay the bearer ——— dollars;" and if, also, his each theory of the purport in any form, he will consider how it will look for a banking firm to put that same interpretation on its promises.

MARINE. — The sidewheel steamer Northern Belle, and her barge, stopped at this port Friday, on her way to Cheboygan, where she is to run upon the inland route.

—Who says Charlevoix is not an important marine port? Seven vessels of the steam kind laid at our harbor docks Sunday.

—Pearson and Stark, the U. S. Steamboat Inspectors, were here yesterday.

—The steamer Clara Belle arrives here from Traverse City every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings, making connections with the Van Raalte from Petoskey the same evenings, and departing for Traverse City on the mornings following her arrival. This steamer, under the command of Capt. Wilbur will be popular on this route.

—The steamer Sutton has, at it were, passed under the magician's wand, and her transformation is complete. She has thirty inches more beam on deck, than formerly, and her after part has been housed in, and arranged as a cabin. She is decked over forward, and a pilot house added. She is now indeed a beautiful little steamer. Capt. A. G. Aldrich, of this place, commands her.

KEEP it before the people! That Charlevoix wants a flouring-mill. An old-settled farming country contiguous to Charlevoix will this year produce 100,000 bushels or over of grain, which demands means whereby it may be handled to a better public and private advantage. Some practical miller with capital can find a good opening here.

THE WEATHER.—Never within the memory of the oldest inhabitant has "Old Sol" shed such everlastingly hot rays upon the earthly denizens of this region. On the 16th and 17th the mercury reached 102 in the shade, and some report even higher than that. Such excessive heat was of short duration however.

Fresh Butter wanted at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

THE steamer Sutton, of Elk Rapids came down Saturday evening with a party of Elk Rapids ladies and gentlemen among whom was our former fellow-townsman A. E. Dougherty, and his daughter. They spent the Sabbath here, and returned yesterday.

Republican County Convention

A Republican County Convention will be held at the Town Hall in the Village of Charlevoix, on the 10th day of August, 1878, at one o'clock p. m. for the purpose of appointing delegates to the Senatorial Convention to be held at Traverse on the 22d, also to appoint delegates to nipoint delegates to the Representative and Congressional conventions.

ROBERT MILLER,
Chairman County Committee.
Charlevoix, July 22d, 1878.

CONFAB AT LITTLE TRAVERSE.—The steamer Gazelle took a party of about thirty Charlevoix people to the Presbyterian Resort at Little Traverse, on the occasion of the address of Hon Schuyler Collax, at that place, on Wednesday last. Mr. Colfax is an orator, and his subject—"Abraham Lincoln,"—is one which brings out a natural earnestness and pathos of expression which is more than eloquence. The intimacy which Mr. Colfax enjoyed with the lamented Lincoln gives him the possession of a fund of personal recollections, the relation of which graphically illustrate the grand yet gentle character of the martyr-President. The address was one to be remembered for a life-time.

Spurgeon says that he once prevented a severe case of hydrophobia by simply getting on a fence and waiting patiently till the mad dog had passed. Many a noble housewife could have prevented having sour, sour biscuits if she had only used Smith's saleratus made by the new process. It is always full weight, uniform in strength and the best in the world.

Persons of unbiased judgment, who have examined the locations thoroughly, pronounce the "Charlevoix Summer Resort" superior in attractiveness to any other spot set apart for the same purpose in Northern Michigan. Its elevated situation, commanding an extended view of both Lake Michigan and Pine Lake, and constantly cultured as it is by the cool lake breezes, it captivates all who beholds it. Its contiguity to the beautiful inland steamboat route, upon the "Lake Geneva of America," and its nearness to the famous trout-streams of the North west, make it to pleasure seekers a place of genuine enjoyment. Its superior attractions are last being found out and taken advantage of.

THE HARBOR WORK.—The specifications give until June 1879 for the completion of the pier-work, but the substructure of the five cribs will undoubtedly be completed this fall, as will also the brush-work at the foot of the piers. The project embraces the following improvements. To re-fill the old north pier with stones; to put in that pier, extending 200 feet, more or less, from the shore; to place a similar apron at brush along the line of shore east from end of present brush-work, on south side of channel for a distance of 200 feet, more or less. The work will take nearly 20,000 cubic feet of timber; 22,625 pounds of iron bolts, and 570 cords of stone. Several bills have gone in from here.

A TRIP UP THE STATE ROAD.—On Friday afternoon we had the pleasure of a ride down the State Road behind Sheriff McLeod's fine team, with our friend J. A. Cameron at the lines. We first called at the farm of Alexander Ross. Mr. Ross has here about seven years, and has made most excellent use of his time. He has twenty acres under crops, and a fine orchard of 50 trees in prolific bearing. Mr. Ross has fine buildings, and everything comfortable around him. We next visited the farm of Mr. J. R. Speidel, a very intelligent German gentleman, who lately purchased 256 acres of land where he is located. He is making good improvement, and will soon have a fine farm. Mr. James Graham is doing well on his place, and his crops look well. Rapid strides are being made in the improvement of the country along the State Road south of this place.

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 1st says the order authorizing military pursuit of cattle thieves over the border into Mexico would hereafter be liberally construed, on the ground that Mexico could prevent the invasions if they would put a period to the incursions.

The publication station out, as published on the 1st, indicates the following: Total debt, including interest of $30,404,551, $2,292,610,448. Cash in Treasury, $286,758,695. Debt, less cash in Treasury, $2,005,786, 830. Increase during June, $2,160,981. Decrease since June 30, 1877, $20,376,260.

On the 2d, Gov. Chadwick, of Oregon, received a dispatch from Canyon City, dated the 29th ult., asking for arms and men to protect the citizens of John Day Valley from the Indians, who were reported as into that region. A scouting party of whites were surrounded by Indians, and fighting was going on on the South Fork of the John Day River.

It was stated, on the 3d, that the War Department in Washington would push invasions to that portion of the country disturbed by the Indians with all practicable haste. The belief was almost universal among army officers that there would be a general Indian war in the section where hostile Indians had pressed themselves.

NEAR Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 4th, a large tree fell on a passenger car which had fled to it for shelter from a racing storm, and instantly killed Ben and Wendell Bitten of the number. Several of the injured, it was feared, would die.

The appropriations made by the last Congress aggregate the sum of $167,300,805.

IT was stated, on the 7th, that Secy. Sherman had not decided to announce the resumption of specie payments in advance of the 1st of January next, the time fixed by law. He said, however, that no action was come before that time, by natural causes, when the premium on specie shall disappear; that we are now approaching that point, and that he thinks it the duty of the Government to employ all legitimate means to produce such result. The coin balance in the Treasury was $300,000,000, and was steadily increasing.

DISPATCHES from Oregon, on the 7th, report continued encounters between the white settlers and the Bannock Indians, and great alarm existed, extending even to the coast towns.

The National Agricultural Congress to meet at New Haven, Conn., on the 27th of August. A number of eminent professors and others have promised addresses on the various subjects relating to agriculture.

The yield of wheat in Kansas this year is said to be greater by thousands of bushels than that of any previous year.

A WOMAN, named Mrs. Elizabeth Riley, living in the southwestern suburbs of St. Louis, after an unsuccessful attempt to build a fire in the kitchen stove, a few days ago, poured coal oil from a can into the fuel, thinking the fire was all out. Much to her surprise, the flames burst out the top of the stove and exploded the can, covering her with a shower of burning oil, which ignited and set to her clothing. She rushed into the yard screaming for help, when her husband, James Riley, and her daughter, Celia, came to her assistance, and in their efforts to relieve her they were severely burned. Mrs. Riley lived but a few hours after the accident.

GOV. GEAR, having been applied to from Marshalltown and other points in Iowa, for authority to call out the militia to put down the tramps, who were congregating in that trains and committing other outrages in various localities, issued a proclamation, on the 6th, instructing the Sheriffs of counties and Mayors of cities and towns throughout the State to be prompt and diligent in preserving the peace. He calls the attention of Sheriffs, etc., to the power vested in them by law to call on the militia of their counties to assist in organizing any resistance to the enforcing of their authority.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

MR. ABRAM S. HEWITT has published a vigorous reply to Mr. Henry Ward Beecher's charge that he (Hewitt) had withheld from the Democrats in Congress Mr. Tilden's opinion of the Hartford bill, a statute that he was unable to learn from Mr. Tilden whether he approved or disapproved of the bill before it was before the Democratic caucus of the Senate or Silesian Station by the evening mail train, and was driven in an omnibus to the foot of the hill where his mother resided.

On finding his parent out and the selling who he was, a neighbor, Mrs. Steel, went at once to the Bethesda Chapel, where a prayer meeting was being held, and where Mrs. Dixon was, she informed her that Thomas had returned, whereupon the mother immediately left the chapel and came home.

She appeared agitated, sat down in a chair, and was seized with illness. A short conversation ensued between mother and son, in which she asked if it "really was her son Thomas," and was told in reply that he was her son. Almost immediately afterward she expired.—Leeds (Eng.) Mercury.

THE Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company was lately charged, in the Circuit Court of Mineral County, W. Va., with being guilty of Sabbath-breaking by running its trains on a Sunday, and on the trial of the case a verdict of guilty was rendered and a fine of $250 was imposed for the offense. Several other cases, involving the same charge, are pending in the same court.

THE time a boy begins to think his mother doesn't know enough to select his clothing for him is a dangerous period in his history.

THE INVESTIGATION.

BELVA BAKER, the man who sent a lengthy telegram to the President suggesting the appointment of Southern conservatives to Cabinet positions, appeared on the 1st, and declared to be either sworn or answer any questions propounded to him. The Chairman stated that as the Committee had no power to compel witnesses to testify during the recess of Congress, he would be discharged from further attendance.

MR. Jenks testified that A. H. Murdock, his brother, had recently been appointed to a position in the New Orleans Custom-House. Kirk Hutchinson and he had not seen Key; Hutchinson since she had been in Washington in attendance upon the Committee. In answer to questions by Mr. Cox, witness stated that at the time of the election Anderson had refused to return to East Feliciana Parish to act as a Supervisor unless he was assured of protection, and the witness then called on Patten, Chairman of the Democratic Committee in New Orleans, and made arrangements satisfactory to Anderson, and he then returned there. He got a guard and a special train was sent down to Port Hudson. Witness then stated that Anderson had not been sworn to either witness, but Louisiana matters affected Key's position, and he was therefore examined a half. On that day after Mr. Hitchcock that the whole matter be referred to Key's decision. Mrs. Jenks then thanked the Committee for the courtesy shown her and was discharged.

The Committee then went into executive session to consider the question of contempt in Belva Lockwood's case. Mr. Cox moved that Mrs. Lockwood be discharged from further attendance before the Committee, and that it was the sense of the Committee that the letter of Belva Lockwood to the Committee was not a contempt of the Committee. Mr. Hitchcock moved to amend by striking out the last clause, and the question was taken on striking out, and resulted in a tie vote, Messrs. Cox, Hitchcock and Pelton voting in favor of striking out, and Messrs. Hoar, Edmunds and Frye voting against striking out. The motion to amend was then lost by the same vote, and the motion to discharge Mrs. Lockwood was carried by the same vote. The Committee then went into open session, and Mrs. Lockwood was discharged.

JOHN BEVONSHIRE, Clerk of the United States District Court at Charleston, testified that he had received some sealed envelopes and to contain copies of the certificates of election, which were signed by Governor Chamberlain. He was not present when the envelopes were opened, but was informed by Mr. Weber that they contained the certificates of election, and that Weber had opened them. Witness had been appointed Clerk of the Board of Canvassers by the Republicans, but took no part in the canvass. Witness was then asked to produce the envelopes, but declined to do so, stating that he had destroyed them

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, July 10, 1878.

Editor Sentinel:

The metropolitan [illegible] although in running order and doing a heavy business, finds itself to be moving through with its troubles yet. Bonds having various sources for bonds, in one of which damages are claimed to the amount of $1,500,000, certain things about its operation are raising such a hue and cry from the South Avenue as even a useless opposition has not begotten. Outraged citizens complain that sparks from the dummies begin them and their store awnings, that gas, smoke and cinders from the engines blind and choke them, that oil from the running gear drips down, ruining their clothes and their disposition, and worse than all, that the ceaseless rumble and clatter of the trains wears upon their nerves, preventing sleep and driving them to the verge of suicide. The formidable arrangement is backed up by a vigorous pole-cat phalanx elected by a hundred or two ghouls who state that in their opinion the road in its present status is a decided success.

These bond, the backing of the well-meaning about the means of spending so many millions. The spirit and cruelty they shrink they can endure without much trouble, but how to head off the noise which is the dominant and omnipresent evil, is a puzzle to the different problem. To any intelligent the managers have called into their councils that versatile and very ordinary man, Elisha Gray of the telephone, phonograph, microphone, and [illegible] &c., &c., and he has now been 2 weeks to several days with one. The men [illegible] and they say [illegible] to find out at what point [illegible] of the train and from the south end of the elevated railway is [illegible] When this is ascertained the [illegible] will be comparatively easy to [illegible] the noise. Meanwhile the [illegible] are [illegible] temporarily quiet, even [illegible] over Edison's performance screaming for the moment like [illegible] of apocalypse.

New York guests and possessions, too, the reputation for originating news and more extraordinary packages, exceptions any other city extant in America. Some of these have already referred to in my correspondence, but nothing that has appeared since I commenced to observe metropolitan pathfishing compares in novelty and originality with The Mercury, which within the last two months has run up in circulation to over half a million of copies weekly. From its start, the Mercury has been a genuine sensation. It champions labor reform, greenbacks, the Grange, Quakerism, and Free Masonry. It has been laughed at, pooh-poohed and abused without stint. Its existence has been ridiculed, and its immediate future predicted—and yet it goes on, palpitating, rolling up a circulation absolutely unparalleled in the country and showing every sign of prosperity. Its publishers violate every tradition of journalism by furnishing this large eight-page weekly for twenty-five cents a year—less than the cost of white paper—and make money above right and left with absolute fearlessness. Its editorials and news items are condensed to a degree that would almost drive John Russell Young himself to suicide, and everything about it conduct indicates phenomenal nerve and ability.

Miss Kate Claxton, the most popular and beautiful Orphan on the New York stage, has leased the Theatre, Theatre, and is to open about September 1st with a fine Company. Her aim is to [illegible] the very best of foreign novelties in advance of their appearance at any other theatre in the country.

And speaking of foreign novelties reminds me of a foreign actress who is about coming to this country and who is now playing through the states on rather extraordinary terms of selling which always precedes the advent of a European star. It is astonishing to me what an amount of interest this can be [illegible] to our newspapers. All the details of her life, habits and appearance are [illegible]

[illegible] with many of [illegible] that the fair creature [illegible] wears in certain plays a dress made [illegible] from which that [illegible] artist recently constructed a corsolene for the Queen of Spain. In the exposition [illegible] of the wearer "Love" is that [illegible]

An unusual crime was committed here this week, with an unusual object. A drunken wife, abused by a drunken husband, living in extreme poverty in an Elizabeth tenement house, became desperate through trouble and drink, and procuring a can of kerosene, saturated the room in which she lived, set fire to it, and left the house in which were her own children, and some twenty other families. Luckily the flames were discovered in time, and sickening sacrifice narrowly escaped. When arrested the miserable woman said her object was, to do something bad enough to get herself sent to prison for ten years, where she hoped to find an asylum from the intolerable life she was leading.

Satan it has become a recognized custom for members of different branches of business to have their organization, such as Boards of Trade, Chambers of Commerce, Bar Associations, etc., the Hotel Proprietors, representing large interests of their own as well as that of public, have had a meeting for the purpose of [illegible] protection.

The presence of dead beats and [illegible] faithful employees there by was no better looked after as well as matters pertaining to the comfort and safety of patrons of the hotels, who are generally the suffering victims. A dead beat or dishonest servant generally does [illegible] from a guest whose time, even [illegible] is arrested, is too important for him to lose it in delay for purpose of prosecuting in the courts. Thus the criminal escapes. The hotel keeper in reputation, but is powerless to [illegible] as the property lost does not [illegible] to the proprietor, he cannot [illegible]. By timely warning given [illegible] hotel to the other through the [illegible] all have notice, and are [illegible] be [illegible] guard.

A [illegible] the managers of these [illegible] was held last week, therefore, to [illegible] the subject and to organize a [illegible] Protective Association. Mr. Lewis Welch was elected President. Mr. Welch is the proprietor of the St. Nicholas, a hotel dear to New Yorkers by reason of its being one of the oldest in town and bearing the name of the city's patron saint, and to the traveling public by reason of its being one of the best hotels in the world. On account of this popularity it has always been sought by the ills.

The changes just announced in the New York Central House, are the subject of comment in all sides. Collector Arthur, who has held his important office for [illegible] years, is suddenly and unexpectedly [illegible] and Naval Officer [illegible] and both fall into the same basket. No cause is assigned by the government as yet for this step. Merritt & Burt are the successors respectively of the gentlemen named.

RADIX.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful World, it decidedly your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unaccountable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of Liver Complaint, or Dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, bilious [illegible] dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Patients now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents. Three dose a will relieve you.

Liver is King.

The liver is the Imperial organ of the body; it governs, or it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is deranged or in its proper action, all kinds of diseases are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all more intimately connected with the working of the liver. It has been supposed by many that Green's August Flower is marvelous in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint and all the numerous symptoms that result from a miserably conditioned liver, but a trial bottle or sample bottle [illegible] to 10 cents. Positively sold [illegible] in the Western Continent and not [illegible] Three doses will prove this to you [illegible] Sold [illegible] Wm. W. [illegible]

A Toledo Romance.

Yesterday occurred the happy ending of a long and weary waiting on the part of a lady who was once the fairest of the fair daughters of Toledo. Eleven years ago she was betrothed, with her parents' consent, to a young man of the character, but without what is considered the most desirable of possessions next to that, namely, money. Hesitating to take his beloved from her pleasant home to subject her to the trials that poverty entails, he bade her farewell, to go West to seek his fortune. She had letters from him full of hope and cheerful expectation until he reached Omaha, when they suddenly ceased. The days were into weeks, the weeks into months and then into years, but still no word from the absent one to the expectant girl who waited and watched all in vain. His friends gave him up for dead, but she, with woman's persistency, refused to think so and destroyed her belief that he would some time return to claim his bride. Seasons came and went, the light of love grew dim from weeping, the roses faded from her cheek, and gradually withdrawing from the scenes she had graced with her presence, her very existence was almost forgotten by some.

Two weeks since, while sitting alone in her quiet parlor, the bell rang, and in a moment more the door was opened and a gentleman entered the room. The bronzed and bearded man had little resemblance to the slender youth to whom she had plighted her troth so many long years before, but the eye of love could not be deceived, and in a moment more she was clasped in the arms of him for whom she had so long watched and waited. His story was soon told. Leaving Omaha with an emigrant train for the Pacific coast, it was attacked by the Indians, and he was taken prisoner and carried away into the far interior. Every effort to escape was futile, and he was passed from one tribe to another, getting farther and farther away from civilization as the months rolled on. At last, by fortunate chance, he managed to devise a plan of escape, and, after incredible hardships, reached San Francisco three years from the time he left Omaha. Here he encountered an old acquaintance from Toledo, who in answer to his inquiries about the dear ones there told him that his betrothed was the wife of another. Stunned and heartbroken, he made no attempt to communicate with anyone here, and was not undeceived until a few weeks ago, when on a visit to San Francisco from its inland home, he had again received tidings through an old neighbor that sent him homeward as fast as the train could bring him father.

The denouement was what might be expected, and this morning the happy pair started for their Western home, whither the good wishes of their friends, including those of the Blade, will follow them.—Toledo Blade.

Buying Wood in Paris.

Have been buying wood. They sell it here by the pound, like coal. Wood shops always have imitation wood piles painted on their fronts. Shopkeepers in the working quarters sell not only coal but kindling on a sign. It is all "grocery," "wash house," "wood shop," "commerce de vins," "cabaret shop," "beef and bouillon shop," "butter, eggs and cheese," "fried fish and potatoes," "fritters" and "restaurant" and the restaurant here is about the last place where you can get something substantial to eat. They will give you wine, or coffee and bread, or beer, at a shop labelled "restaurant" but ask for a beefsteak, and they point next door. However, you can generally find it next door, only in most cases it is difficult to get a wash tantory, of which Paris is full, they may not keep coffee. It is the most peculiar and unintelligent city to get a meal in I ever visited or imagined could exist. You go to a house labelled "Hotel" and have engravings, and you find no bar, no landlord, no rooms to let by the night, no meals or table of d'hote, no customers but people who come in a mass at the month and possibly cook in them. We've learned "hotels" and restaurants here mean something quite different from the "hotels" at home where it was first naturalized. Now as to wood. At Paris wood-chop beats the Exposition. It is generally kept in a woman, and the woman is generally washing. As they keep a great deal of charcoal with the wood the woman is generally black, and if the man of the house happens to be about the premises he will be darker. I have also always found a baby playing about the floor, which is blacked. I point to something I have that is France mus and the 2 wives pull together lessly in doing business than in America. Whether it is grocery, woodchop, photographer, restaurant or vegetable shop, you will always find the woman up and doing, with the husband. She seems to have the business as well as he. She sits at the desk and takes the cash. If the man be out, she can weigh and measure. She knows all the prices and the contents of every box, keg and jar. If there be a family, they are also all up and doing. My vegetable marchand, four doors below, has a wife, a pretty daughter and a sister. In the morning, when trade is the most lively, the whole family turn out and wait on customers. They haven't far to turn, because the potato where they eat, sleep and enjoy all the living they possess, adjoins the shop. They can turn out of it at a moment's notice and invade the shop. They live as well on the sidewalk as indoors. The street

How a San Francisco Lady Routed a Burglar.

On Thursday last a lady residing on California street, near Leavenworth, whose husband is absent from the city, collected by his request $125 for rents. She expended $30 of it during the day, and the remaining $95 she intended putting in the bank the following day. She did not retire until eleven o'clock on Thursday night, and was just dropping off into a sleep when she was suddenly aroused to perfect wakefulness by a slight clatter. She went through a small and startled mental calculation to account for it, and concluded that it was caused by the dropping of the key of the front door on the hall floor, and that it must have been pushed out by a burglar in effecting an entrance to rob the house. Now was the time for the average lady to leap from her couch, turn in seven different alarms, turn on a flood of gas, throw up the window and scream, murder, fire and police. This lady was not of the average, and slipping noiselessly from the bed she found her husband's loaded revolver without striking a light, cocked it, and creeping from her room into the landing of the stairs leading to the hall, she peered down. She not unnaturally concluded, for the hall below making a very good bull's-eye reflector against the half light of the opened door beyond she saw the mingled figure of a burglar approaching the stairs.

"Stop there. What do you want?" she asked. The man halted for a moment in evident surprise, but answered with no oaths.

"I want money, and I know you've got some, and I'm going to have it."

But the intrepid lady never faltered, and retaining her place at the head of the stairs and her hand on the bull's-eye, she answered:

"You shall not have it. I have the money and I will keep it, too."

"What's that you say? I can't hear you. Hold on a minute till I come up to you," said the fellow, starting to ascend.

"Never mind," said the lady, "I'll save you the trouble of climbing the stairs," and she immediately started down. The burglar stood astonished as this suspicious civility until the lady had descended into the faint rims of light penetrating from the street, when he saw the glint of the levelled pistol. He instantly made a bound for the door with a muttered oath, leaped down the porch steps, cleared the fence into the street and scooped. The lady's nerve is deserving of all praise, as one such reception as hers goes further in checking burglary than half a dozen halting prosecutions in a Criminal Court, and she would only have added to the excellence of the result by shooting a good-sized bullet into the felon's stomach.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Some Japanese Temples and Modes of Worship.

In letters recently received from Japan my friend describes a beautiful Shinto temple that was especially devoted to bearing. Children go and offer their pens at one of the shrines. But first I must tell you what Shintoism is. It means the worship of the ancestors of the Mikado, and even of him personally. He is said to lie descended from the sun, which they believe is the great originator of everything. A mirror is arranged to reflect the sun's rays, and generally that is all there temples contain. But the grounds around this one were very strangely laid out. First, there was a broad walk, with shrines and images on the outer edge; on the inner, arbors covered with wistaria, where you could buy tea, sausages and eggs. Inside, behind the shrines, was a pond shaped much like a Greek cross; and in the center of this an island, with pine trees that had been brought from a mountain. Over these they, like the stork, are an emblem of long life, and especially sacred.

This island was connected with the outer walk by two arched bridges, the steepest and highest arches you can imagine. There were pieces of wood laid on to help people climb up and down. These bridges were several hundred years old. Among the images were toad and green dragons, and a horse with a dragon's head placed over a well. They drew the water through a hole in his back. There was also a squat little image with solid egg around it its neck, and its head all covered with salt. To pour on salt is an act of worship. Then there was another little image, with quantities of pebbles thrown about him, and one could buy a gift of these.

My friend says you can hardly turn around in Tokio without seeing a temple; yet they were told that hundreds had been closed and pulled down since this dynasty began.

Buddhism is the religion of the common people. The more intellectual people believe in the doctrines of Confucius, a great philosopher, who lived a long while ago.

The Shinto temples both to Confucius and Buddha; and the grounds around them are like parks. Some have a succession of terraces, and all have splendid old trees, with dark, glossy foliage, and double blossoming fruit trees between.

At Kioto is an image of Buddha, sitting in a lotus flower, fifty-eight feet high. Part of it is in ruins, but when entire this statue contained 550 pounds of gold. A temple of 175 feet stands over it. The temple bells are also undoubtedly of gold, and when ringing sound very solemn. They are made of bronze and gold, and some contain a large proportion of gold.

The fast train on the Boston & Albany Railroad, drawn by the locomotive Sacramento, Cornelius Teeling, engineer, and which was due in the city at 2:50 p. m., narrowly escaped what might have been an appalling disaster, but for the calmness. The fireman that day had blown a large tree across the track near Genet's Crossing, and there was here about a broombush, just as the train was dashing along at a tremendous rate of speed. A tramp who happened to be in the vicinity annexed the dangling and running among the curve at the top of his speed signalled the approaching train. Fortunately the engineer noticed the signal and succeeded in checking the speed of the train before it came in contact with the tree. The forward part of the engine was badly damaged, but no other injury was done. The passengers, realizing the great danger they had escaped, made a collection amounting to $14, which they gave the tramp, and the train was started for the city, where it arrived without further mishap. The tramp was brought to East Albany, and given a pass through to Boston.—Albany Journal.

The Culinary Art.

There are a goodly number of people who talk about cooking as if it were some Elensinian mystery, something so difficult to understand as the Chaldaic tongue or "Euclid's Asses Bridge" and so hard to execute as a Greek slave. They speak of a good cook as one we praise almost as the rose or a serpent; as if the universe had only been able to produce a few specimens, and as if a knowledge of cookery and a person has a genius for cooking, as though it had covenanted the rest of them from failure, conscientiously Nature had not selected them for that end, or she would have endowed them likewise. The fact is, that anyone in her right mind can cook, if she wants to badly enough, if the incentive is strong enough. It is no such wonderful accomplishment; it only requires attention, judgment and patience, together with a great will toward the work in hand, and an interest in the welfare of the household —and who will acknowledge that she lacks these qualifications? One cannot expect to turn out a good digestible dinner, and feed a novel or gossip with a neighbor during the process. You cannot serve two masters; if you attempt it, the bread will burn, the fire will catch, the steak will "shrivel in a fruitless fire," the soup will simmer away. If you are not interested in the business, and don't care a fig how it succeeds, so that meals are served and people fed, and you can wash your hands of the whole concern, if you only cook as a make-shift—from hand to mouth, as it were, hoping the Fates will interfere to morrow and relieve you of a distasteful occupation—your gravy will naturally be thin and lumpy and unseasoned, your bread sour, your cake heavy, your doughnuts will soak fat, your tomato will be overdone, and your husband will wonder why your pastry doesn't taste like his mother's. Cooking cannot be taken up as a hobby and amusement merely, as we take up crochet, and any excellence be attained. One doesn't become an accomplished cook at the first essay. It requires many a failure, many a partial success, many a blister upon the hands, many a trial of temper. Young people go into the home kitchen and dabble in en-cakes and dumm-eries, and think they have mastered the noble art, when, in truth, they are ignorant of its rudiments, and believe that the ability to manufacture Charlotte-Russe and maraschino is a recommendation of a good cook; and those are all well in their way, but only fancy-work. Instead, there is no royal road to cooking; it is a plain, much-traveled turnpike, where the simplest need not lose the way, though it lead up hill. And, after all, if

> "To emerge a room as by the door is best, > Makes wise and the action fine," it is not a worthy task to teach ourselves how to employ the goods the gods provide, that we may neither waste nor starve them, but that they may best subserve to the nourishment of brain and body? And has not the cook a mission, of which she will be called to render an account?—Harper's Bazar.

Arctic Explorations.

The story of Arctic exploration is always an enchanting one, every step cold with the dry nuttiness of a beefsteak. It is a story of battle in its intensest forms—of brave men called upon to encounter the utmost fortitude, and unceasing watchfulness and ingenuity to meet and overcome the giant forces of nature in the most inhospitable moods. Many glorious triumphs are inscribed upon its pages, and also sad records of defeat and death. But whether the feeling called up be pride or sorrow, the same absorbing interest attaches to the story, especially when the reader is an Englishman. America has gained honor by her Arctic explorations, and Austria, Germany and Sweden have left traces of their enthusiasm in the frozen North; but Englishmen have always regarded the work as their special heritage, bequeathed them by the long line of Arctic navigators, from Davis, Frobisher, Hudson and Baffin down to the ill-fated Franklin. Even now the less sentimental of the last named expedition chilled our ardor for many years, but the work was only suspended. For years after the mysterious disappearance of the Erebus and Terror, English interest in Arctic exploration was abounded over. Expedition after expedition went out, but the object of each was primarily to clear up the mystery in which Franklin's fate was wrapped, and when the lonely little Fox, equipped by Lady Franklin, found the fatal paper on King William's Land which told of the abandonment of the Erebus and Terror, the shock and disappointment to the Nation were such that any further attempts at Arctic exploration on the part of England were postponed indefinitely. Indeed the general discovery Franklin had in view—the discovery of the Northwest passage—has never since been attempted, and probably never will be. But through all this long period the Royal Geographical Society never lost heart. Year after year successive Presidents have urged that another attempt should be made to reach the Pole and at last their perseverance met with its reward. Just thirty years after the sailing of the Erebus and Terror, Capt. Nares cast off from the dock yard wharf at Hartlepool on board H. M. S. Alert, with the Discovery as her consort. The general plan of operations was laid down in Capt. Nares' sailing instructions from the Admiralty, the main task set before him being the attempt of the highest possible northern latitude. There are many geographical and scientific objects, but the grand principal was to reach the North Pole if possible. As all the world now knows, Capt. Nares' efforts were unceremoniously cut short after he had succeed in reaching a higher northern latitude than any of his predecessors.—London Week.

Pocket-Books.

—To one quart of warm milk add a cup of butter, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, and two well-beaten eggs; then stir in flour enough to make a moderately stiff sponge; add a small cupful of yeast, and let the dough rise; afterward, mix in flour enough to make a soft dough, and let it rise again; then dissolve a lump of soda the size of a hen's egg in sour milk, work it in the dough, and roll into sheets half an inch thick; spread with thin layer of butter, cut into squares and fold over pocket-book shape; let them stand in the pans, to rise, a little while before baking.

—Every piece of horse-radish grows: if we take a piece of root about an inch in length, about the size of a large bean, and put it an inch below the surface of the prepared ground, a short piece will come to the surface and form a crown, and another, and another portion will descend and probably fork to form a root; but instead of this, if we make a hole a foot or so deep in the ground, with a dibble, and put in three pieces of root drop to the bottom, a clean, straight sprout will come up to the surface, and this will in time make as clean and thrifty a market piece as could be desired.—Exchange.

Why Chicks Die.

A subscriber writes to us asking why his chicks die off so rapidly, rarely living more than two or three weeks. He does not tell us the treatment they receive, but in the following from the Massachusetts Ploughman, he will probably find his answer. In our own poultry yard we have been very successful with young chicks, and have fed broken rice alternately with the cracked corn, giving an occasional feed of potatoes by way of a change. The great point in raising chickens is to keep them eating all the time, or at any rate, to keep their digestive organs nourished with the supplied. Short commons' are not recognized in chicken raising."

The remaining portion is to keep a dish of "indian meal dough" mixed up, and two or three times a day a lot is thrown to the chickens. If they eat it, well and good; if not, and the chances are they will not, they having become tired of one single article of diet set before them day after day, it stands and sours. If a quantity is thus found uneaten the next feed is likely to be a light one, and the chickens, driven by hunger, finally devour the sour stuff, the result is cholera or some other fatal disease sets in and their owner wonders "why my chickens are all dying off." In our own practice we find that small quantities of varied food if given to the chickens often produce much better results than any other method of feeding.

Indian meal dough we banished from our poultry yards long ago and on no conditions would we permit it to be fed to chickens to be fed with it. For the first morning meal we give all our young poultry stock boiled potatoes mashed up fine. We find nothing so good and acceptable, and as we recently the small potatoes, those which are unmarketable and not large enough for the table, they prove to be more profitable than any other article of food.

When, in days gone by, we used to feed the chickens with the traditional Indian meal dough, we always counted on losing a large percentage of them, and the numbers that died from cholera, diarrhœa and kindred diseases were great. Now a sick chicken is unknown to our yards and we lay our success entirely to the disuse of Indian meal dough. After the potatoes are disposed of we give our chickens all the fine cracked corn they will eat up clean. We cannot find in the grain stores corn cracked to the proper degree of fineness, and we have as a rule, one in our poultry house a large-sized coffee mill, such as grocers use, and we run the corn through that.

If coarse large chickens, those which are ten or twelve weeks old, do not need such fine ground corn, but the young birds do. In about two hours after the cracked corn is eaten we give all the wheat screenings that the chickens will eat, and in another two hours spread before them a fresh meal of boiled potatoes. For supper they have all the cracked corn and wheat they can eat.

The best system of feeding, however, will not avail if the young birds are permitted to become overrun with vermin. They should be anointed on their heads and under their wings and on their backs once a week with a mixture of equal parts of lard and kerosene oil. If the hens are anointed in the same way the additional labor will prove remunerative. Unless proper management is exercised chicken raising is one of the most unsatisfactory of employments, but if it is done systematically, is as profitable and pleasant as any other business.—N. Y. Herald.

About Hay.

A good supply of hay on every farm, adequate to the wants of the flock stock which the farmer intends to keep, is indispensable. If it is expected that the stock is to prove profitable. There is no doubt that many valuable animals have been annually sacrificed to false economy in feeding unnutritious or poor hay or straw. A man who fodders such a policy stands in his own light, and if he cannot change to a better manner, the sooner he sells his stock and quits the business the better it will be for himself and the animals. He will soon find to his cost that the loss of a horse, or a good cow, or a few sheep, and the "run-down" condition of his entire stock, more than counterbalances any saving that can be effected by using inferior, badly cured, weedy and musty hay. It is the poorest kind of economy, in fact, it cannot be called by that term. In conversing the grasses and forage plants into hay, or during them, the object is, of course, to so treat them as to expel the water they contain (which amounts to nearly two-thirds of their weight), with the least loss of their nutritive properties. To secure this object the grass must be cut at that stage of its growth when the full bloom is with the maximum of nutrition can be obtained; and then it is necessary to so conduct the curing process that nutritive juices shall not be lostby the washing of rains. While newly cut grass in quite green state and rain may not materially injure it, but repeated rains and turnings will destroy much of its value. When ready to cut, grass and clover would require gum, sunlight, albuminous and other valuable compounds, which are liable to be washed out by heavy rains. On this point Prof. Voelcker remarks that by repeated wettings and turnings the crop becomes more or less bruised, and not only are the sugar, and gums, and other soluble matters liable to be washed out, but the bruised state of the plants permitting, as they do, a portion of these various constituents to escape through the lacerated cell walls, indexes fermentation, which, if not checked at once, causes further loss. During fermentation, soluble albumen and sugar are destroyed, two of the most valuable elements of nutrition; hence in showery weather grass recently cut should not be hastily gathered into cocks, but, if necessary, and under all circumstances the crop should be handled as lightly as possible. Hay may be made or be injured by brunsing and breaking the hay.

With the appliances and facilities now within the reach of farmers for the curing of hay, it can be more accomplished speedily at the right time —provided always the weather will permit—and the maximum of nutritive value secured.—Western Rural.

"Under Fire."

The first time that a soldier goes into action he fancies the shot that he hears whizzing through the air is aimed at him. But if he is cut hit at first, he soon acquires a sort of fatalistic feeling that he never will be. The eve of a battle might be supposed to be a solemn moment. I have been at several eves, and I never perceived the vestige of solemnity, nor—so far as I could perceive—did it strike anyone that the next day he might be killed. The thoughts of everyone were concentrated first on supper, and then on finding a comparatively comfortable place in which to sleep. During a battle all not immediately engaged are simply bored. If ever a hand-to-hand fight takes places it is due to some blunder being committed on one side or the other. Most of the regiments engaged do not see the enemy. Attacking a column and having columns charge are things of the past. Shells and bullets are fired into a position or upon troops advancing. The victory is decided by artillery and breach-loader firing. Those who can concentrate the heaviest fire upon particular strategical points win. So paramount is the whole affair that it is an unlikely axiom that if one-third of the best regiment in the world be put hors de combat, the remainder will execute a strategical maneuver to the rear.—Cornhill London Truth.

The Church Offering!
By L. O. EMERSON. In this new book everything is fresh and bright. Many of the tunes are by the compiler, and are of the best quality, and by an Authors Book. In the singing, however, by the use of a Harmonic Chart, and by the good old earlier tunes, the singer is made to feel at home in the service. Sound in character, and in the service. Sound to universally use. 112 pp. 35 cts.

CHARLEVOIX SUMMER RESORT.

CITIZENS' UNION ACTIVE—AN ASSOCIATION ORGANIZED—OFFICERS—MEMBERSHIP—NEW BEACH—COST OF TRAVEL, BOARDING, ETC.—KALAMAZOO SENDS THE PIONEER PARTY, WHICH IS ALREADY AT WORK—GROUNDS.

CHARLEVOIX, June 26, 1878.

DEAR BEE THOMPSETTE—May I take a little space in the HERALD to report the progress made by the Charlevoix Summer Resort? At the last meeting of the State Convention, it was announced that citizens of Charlevoix had made an offer to the Baptists of Michigan and Indiana of twenty-five acres of lived up a Summer Resort. This offer has been accepted. An organization has been formed under the laws of this state, and the transfer of the land has been made. The report for our people is now ready to be completed and the first parties are here erecting cottages. It is not however the intention of the constituent members of the association to restrict the use of the land to Baptists, and so the word Baptist does not form a part of the corporate name. We do not desire to exclude good people of other denominations from a retreat where health and beautiful scenation are sought. In fact, some, whose religious connection would naturally lead them to other summer resorts are already drawn to Charlevoix by the superior attractions of the place. If Charlevoix were as accessible as Petoskey, it would soon be crowded to excess.

There are several ways of reaching this place. A change of boats running between Traverse City and Petoskey is being made at the time of this writing, so that a definite announcement of their route cannot be made this week. A stage leaves Petoskey for Charlevoix, sixteen miles distant every morning at 7 o'clock. The road is a good one, and fare $1.00. A stage, a good democrat, leaves Boyne Falls Station on the railroad, 15 miles south of Petoskey, Tuesday, Thursdays, and Saturday mornings, at 9 o'clock, connecting at the head of Pine Lake with the Gazelle, a fine little steam boat running to Charlevoix. The stage ride through the woods is pleasant although the road is rough—stage and steam boat fair at present $1.50.

Boats of the Western Transportation Co. leave Buffalo and Chicago every Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock, touching at Charlevoix—fare from Detroit to this place, including state room and meals $8.50, from Chicago $7.00.

The Menominee, of the Cundrich Transportation Co., leaves Chicago every Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock, fare to this place $7.00.

Any person, not objectionable to the Board of Directors, may become a member of the Charlevoix Summer Resort by the payment of $10.00. There may be a small annual assessment, not to exceed $2.00 unless authorized by two thirds of the members present at a meeting called for the purpose. A by-law provides that in no case shall the assessment exceed $5.00 a year for the first five years.

The land is divided into lots of 50 feet by 100, not to be sold, but leased for a specified term of years. Each member is entitled to the use of a lot on which to erect a cottage, and is also entitled for the present season, to half fare rates on the Grand Rapids and Indiana R. R. for himself and all the members of his family, from any point on the road to Traverse City or Petoskey. In order to secure these rates, application must be made to Prof. Samuel Brooks, Kalamazoo or Charlevoix, and he will send a certificate of membership to the general ticket agent, who will endorse it, and either return it to the secretary or send it directly to the applicant, as may be desired. This certificate thus endorsed is to be presented to the ticket agent of the station where the ticket is bought. The ticket agent will return the certificate as his authority for selling the half fare ticket. Accordingly tickets for all the members of the family must be bought at the same time. Those tickets may be obtained any time until September 30th, with a return limit of October 31st. No arrangement has yet been made with any other road. Excursion tickets, open to the public generally, may be had on the G. R. & I. R. R. at any time during the season for two cents a mile, and for four weeks ending with August 20, for one and a half cents a mile.

We hope that many persons will visit Charlevoix the present season, and judge for themselves of its attractions and its salubrity. And I may add that every one who joins the association will contribute to its success.

The first regular meeting was held in Kalamazoo on Friday last. Mr. H. W. Page was elected president; Dr. K. Brooks, treasurer, and Prof. S. Brooks, secretary. A constitution and by laws were adopted.

I may only add in closing that the beach it I received last summer from a few weeks spent near this place, has stood by through the twelve months. I sincerely hope that many of our pastors, who are worn by the labors of the year, and many of our lawyers may enjoy the clear air and all the invigorating influences of this resort.

Good board may be had here for $5, $6, $7 according to the room. Also board in private families to a limited extent for $5.00.

Yours truly,

SAMUEL BROOKS,

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

THE issue of ordinary postage stamps by the Postoffice Department during the twelve months ending June 30, last, amounted to $36,686,918, against $18,182,970 the preceding year. The issue of newspaper stamps increased from 41,000,695 to 44,668,845; of stamped envelopes and wrappers from 48,666,222 to 48,905,774; of postcards from about 150,000,000 to 200,000,000. The total amount of increase in the issues for sale to the public was $4,957,820, or 2½ per cent, as compared with the previous year.

IN a dispatch, received at Army Headquarters in San Francisco, on the 8th, dated Birch Creek, July 5, Gen. Howard says he found the Indians in force on the height near Butter Creek, and advanced two columns, one under Three-kinsmen, and attacked the hostiles and drove them from their position to another higher up, which was almost impregnable, but after a three assault from different sides at once the Indians again fled, abandoning their horses, provisions, ammunition and camp utensils. They made for the thick timber, crossing the Blue Ridge, where they made another stand, from which they were dislodged and driven further into the mountains. Five enlisted men were wounded during the engagement, and about twenty horses were killed. It was impossible to state the loss of the enemy. The soldiers' loss are said to have behaved in the best possible manner throughout the affair. The news from John Day Valley, on the 9th, was to the effect that the inhabitants were at the mercy of a large number of savages, who invested some 4,000 square miles of territory, combining all the natural facilities for a prolonged war.

GEN. SHERMAN has issued a general order instructing the officers of the army as to their duties under the law passed by Congress as a part of the Army Appropriation bill. Gen. Sherman calls attention to the proviso of the Constitution and acts of Congress relating to the army understood to be exempt from the operation of the new law, and under which alone will officers of the army permit the use of troops under their command to aid the civil authorities as a posse comitatus, or in execution of the laws. Applications for the use of troops for such purposes must be forwarded through the military channel to the Adjutant-General for the consideration and action of the President.

IN New York, on the 11th, Sec'y Sherman had an informal conference with the representatives of the late Syndicate, relative to the question of resumption. Mr. Sherman expressed confidence in his ability to resume at once, if necessary, and the bankers were generally of the opinion that there was nothing in the way of such a course. The Secretary said that, although he could not begin to redeem 4 per cents before January, yet it was in his power to pay checks and drafts upon the Treasury in specie, and intimated that he would soon begin to do so. The members of the Syndicate said, after the conference, that he would not be surprised to see the Treasury paying gold on or before Aug. 1.

NEWS was received at Umatilla, Ore., on the 11th, that the hostiles whipped back by Gen. Howard had started eastward, for the Snake River, along the slope of the Blue Mountains. In a dispatch to Gov. Chadwick, dated the 9th, Gen. Howard states that he had apparently met the main body of the Indians. He had sent a column in pursuit of those who escaped after the battle of the previous day.

AT Beloit, Wis., on the 12th, a number of tramps, who were engaged in defying the authorities, and in efforts to capture a freight train to convey them on their way to Minnesota, were sentenced to from five to thirty days each in the County Jail.

IN a South Brooklyn tenement, a few evenings ago, Mrs. Margaret Walsh brought the kerosene can to add in kindling the kitchen fire. The usual result followed, and Mrs. Walsh and her seven-year-old daughter were fatally burned.

ABOUT sixty female employes in the Patent Office, at Washington, were discharged, on the 15th, because of the reduction in the appropriations.

MESSRS. DUN, BARLOW & CO., in their late circular, report the number of business failures in the United States for the past six months at 5,838, against 7,740 for the same period in 1877. The liabilities are stated at $130,000,000, as against $99,000,000 for the same period in 1877.

INTENSE heat was experienced at St. Louis, on the 15th, the mercury ranging from 95 deg. to 103 deg. in the shade. Over 150 cases of sunstroke occurred on Sunday, between forty and fifty being fatal. There were fifteen fatal cases on the 13th, and over twenty on the 14th. Extreme heat prevailed generally throughout the West, on the 15th, and several deaths from sunstroke are reported from different localities.

THE news from Pendleton, Ore., on the 15th, was to the effect that the troops under Capt. Miles had driven the Indians into the Foot Hills, near Cayuse Station, after a four or five hours' fight at long range in the valley. Several horses were captured, and quite a number of Indians were killed. The volunteers still west, and were reinforced by the officer in command. The Indians were surrounded, and further fighting would ensue.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE Michigan Democracy met in State Convention, at Lansing, on the 10th, and nominated the following ticket: For Governor, Orlando M. Barnes; Lieutenant Governor, A. P. Swineford; State Treasurer, Alexander McFarlin; Secretary of State, George H. Murdock; Auditor-General, W. T. B. Schermerhorn; Commissioner of Land Office, George H. Lord; Attorney-General, A. B. Morse; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Z. Trinesdell; Member of Board of Education, E. F. Uhl. The resolutions adopted arraign the Republican party for its alleged corruption in office, its extravagant legislation, etc., and its alleged stealing of the Presidency from the people and placing a fraud in the Presidential chair; indorse the investigation into the Electoral frauds; declare that gold and silver coin is the money of the Constitution, and that all paper currency should be convertible into such coin at the will of the holder; oppose the further reduction of the volume of the currency, and indorse the action of Congress prohibiting such reduction, and congratulate the country upon a reduction of $50,000,000 in the National expenditure during the last four years.

THE Missouri Democracy met in State Convention, on the 10th, and nominated candidates for Supreme Judge, Register of Deeds, State Superintendent of Schools and Railway Commissioner, all except the latter (A. M. Seeley), being the present incumbents. The platform adopted condemns and arraigns the Joint High Electoral Commission for its faithlessness in refusing to investigate allegations of fraud; denounces the National Banking system, and demands the substitution of legal-tender notes in lieu of National Bank notes, in quantities sufficient to meet the business wants of the country; vehemently opposes a return to specie payments, and demands the immediate repeal of the Specie-Resumption act, etc., etc.

GREAT excitement was caused in political circles in New York City, on the 11th, by the news of the suspension, by the President, of Collector Arthur, of the Custom-House, and the appointment of Gen. E. A. Merritt to succeed him. A. B. Cornell was also suspended from the Naval Office, and Col. S. W. Burt was promoted to the position. Gen. C. K. Graham was appointed Surveyor.

A CHINAMAN recently made application to Judge Choate, of the United States District Court in New York, to become a citizen. The Judge denied the application, under the decision of Judge Sawyer, of the United States Circuit Court of California, in the case of Ah Yung.

THE forty-ninth annual Convention of the American Institute of Instruction met at Fabyan, N. H., on the 9th. Three thousand teachers from New England and the West were present.

THE Arkansas Greenback State Convention assembled at Little Rock, on the 13th, and appointed a State Central Committee, and authorized it to place a State ticket in the field.

GEO. W. FISH, of Michigan, was, on the 15th, commissioned by President Hayes to be United States Consul at Tunis.

FOREIGN.

THE National Federation of Liberal Associations met in Birmingham, Eng., issued a circular, on the 6th, urging an immediate general protest against the virtual annexation of Cyprus and the secret conclusion of an alliance with Turkey.

PRINCE MILAN has issued a proclamation declaring the independence of Servia.

AUSTRIA and Servia signed a commercial and railway convention, on the 9th.

HOEDEL, the man who made the first attempt upon the life of the Emperor of Germany, was tried, on the 10th, found guilty and sentenced to be beheaded.

SIR GARNET WOLSELEY has been appointed Governor of the newly-acquired Island of Cyprus.

ACCORDING to Vienna telegrams of the 10th, the request of the Porte, that when Austria entered Bosnia she should make a declaration that the sovereign rights of the Sultan would be respected, had been denied, Austria replying that she was acting in obedience to European command and could not make a protectorate.

IT was stated, from Paris, on the 11th, that Americans had obtained more Exposition prizes than the citizens of any other nationality, in proportion to the number of exhibitors.

A TELEGRAM from Sydney, New South Wales, of the 11th says two native tribes on the Island of New Caledonia had risen against the authorities, and massacred 125 whites and captured two military stations.

GREAT excitement existed in Montreal, Can., on the 12th, because of the intended street parade of Orangemen. The Mayor had issued a proclamation several days before, prohibiting the proposed demonstration, and stating that he should use his authority to suppress any effort in that direction by members of the Society. The Orangemen persisted in their determination to parade in a body, notwithstanding the Mayor's orders, and up to late hour in the forenoon of the 12th, when, ascertaining that they would not have the aid of the military under the Police Magistrate, and that the latter would be used indiscriminately to quell any riotous proceedings, the street march was abandoned. To test the legality of the Orange Association, and its consequent right to parade in public, several of the leaders, including D. Grant, County Master, and John Hamilton, County Secretary, of the Association, were arrested and subsequently released on bail. During the day a young man wearing an Orange lily was attacked by a special Constables and struck across the head. As an Orangeman was proceeding home in a cab late in the afternoon, he was attacked by an infuriated mob and was very badly beaten. The Orangemen were nearly all conveyed from their hall to their homes in cabs, under the escort of the regular police, about half-past five in the evening.

THE British Legation at Constantinople took formal possession of the Island of Cyprus, in the name of Great Britain, on the 12th. The Cypiotes are said to be pleased with the change of rulers, and have telegraphed thanks to England.

THE closing session of the European Congress was held on the 18th, and the Plenipotentiaries then affixed their signatures to the treaty. The treaty is said to number sixty-four articles, is worded in French and printed on parchment. It commences, "In the name of Almighty God," and closes by the declaration that the Treaty of Paris shall remain intact except as modified by the present treaty.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch of the 14th says a widely-extended conspiracy against the reigning Sultan had been discovered, and fifty arrests made.

A VIENNA dispatch of the 15th says Bosnia had become reconciled to Austrian occupation, and would offer no further opposition. It was also said that Italy and Greece were negotiating an offensive and defensive alliance, by the terms of which the former Power would aid in the defense of the Grecian coast in the event of war between the latter Power and Turkey.

AN Athens (Greece) telegram of the 15th says extensive incendiary fires were prevailing throughout the Province of Thessaly. The harvest had been nearly destroyed.

A General Army Order.

WASHINGTON, July 10.

Gen. Sherman, in a general order, invites the attention of all officers of the army to a section in the Army Appropriation bill providing that "it shall not be lawful to employ any part of the army as a posse comitatus or otherwise, for the purpose of executing the laws, except in such cases and under such circumstances as such employment of said force may be expressly authorized by the Constitution or by act of Congress."

The order contains the provisions of the Constitution and acts of Congress understood as intended to be excepted from the operation of the above section, and authorizing the employment of military forces for the purpose of executing the laws, namely:

1. The Fourth Article of the Constitution, declaring that the United States shall protect each of every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence.

2. The Civil Rights law (Secs. 1,984, 1,985 and 1,989 of the Revised Statutes), which makes it lawful for the President to employ such part of the land or naval forces or of militia as may be necessary to aid in the execution of a judicial process, or as shall be necessary to prevent the violation and enforce the due execution of civil rights.

3. The Elective Franchise law (Sec. 2,003, prohibiting the presence at the polls, upon the judicial process issued by the proper officer, of any troops unless it be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls.

4. The Indian laws (Secs. 2,150, 2,151 and 2,152, R. S., which authorize the superintendent of every person who may be in the Indian country in violation of law, examination and seizure of stores, preventing the introduction of persons or property into the Indian country contrary to law, and also in destroying and breaking up any distillery for manufacturing ardent spirits, set up or continued within the Indian country.

5. Sec. 2,461 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the President to employ the military force to prevent felling, cutting down, or other destruction of timber on the United States in Florida, and to prevent the transportation or carrying away of any such timber when cut or to be felled or cut down, and to take such other and further measures as may be necessary and proper for the preservation of the timber of the United States in Florida.

6. Sec. 5,297 of the Revised Statutes, making it lawful for the President, or such officer of the land or naval forces or of the militia of the United States as shall be employed for the purpose by the President, to carry into effect the laws of the United States in all cases which by the laws of Congress treaties of the United States are to be carried into effect by the United States.

7. Sec. 5,299 of the Revised Statutes, which makes it lawful for the President, in case of insurrection against any State, on application of the Legislature or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, to call forth such number of the militia of any other State or States which may be applied for as he deems sufficient to suppress such insurrection, and to use for the purpose such of the naval forces as he may judge necessary.

8. Sec. 5,300, declaring that the provisions of the preceding section shall be construed to authorize the employment of the naval forces for the purposes and under the conditions therein stated.

9. Sec. 5,298, which provides that in case of insurrection in any State against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President, on application of the Legislature of such State, or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, to call forth such number of the militia of any other State as may be applied for as he deems sufficient to suppress such insurrection, and to use for the purpose such of the naval forces as he may judge necessary.

10. Sec. 5,336, which provides that it shall be lawful for the President, in case of insurrection in any State against the Government thereof, on application of the Legislature of such State, or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, to call forth such number of the militia of any other State or States as may be applied for as he deems sufficient to suppress such insurrection, and to employ for the same purposes such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary, and Secs. 5,297, 5,298 and 5,300, aforesaid.

The President's attention to be promptly given to enforce the laws whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, the ordinary course of judicial proceedings is prevented.

The order concludes as follows:

Officers of the army will not permit the use of troops under their command for all the evil authorities as a posse comitatus, or in the execution of laws except as mentioned in the foregoing enactments. When applications for the use of troops for those purposes are received, they must be forwarded through the military channel to the Adjutant-General for the consideration and action of the President.

A CLERGYMAN, having been inducted into a living in Kent, took occasion, during his first sermon, to introduce the word "optics." At the conclusion of the service a farmer who was present thanked him for his discourse, but intimated that he had made a mistake in one word, softening down the severity of the criticism by saying, "We all know, very well, sir, what you meant." On the clergyman making further inquiries about the word, the farmer replied: "What you call hop-sticks, in this part of the country we call hop-poles."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Country Gentleman says that the growth of horns in cattle may be prevented by searing the germ, before it passes through the skin, with a hot iron. By this means the growth of horn is suspended, and the animal remains hornless.—Iowa State Register.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

A MONUMENT to the late Jonathan Walker, the "Man of the Branded Hand," will be unveiled, at Muskegon, on the 1st of August, the Sixtieth Anniversary of the Emancipation of Slaves in the West Indies. It is intended to make the unveiling the occasion for uniting together the old friends of freedom, generally, throughout the country. Wendell Phillips, Fred Douglass, Parker Pillsbury, Austin Blair and other eminent members of the "Old Guard" have been invited to be present and participate.

MRS. JAMES RAYMOND, mother of the late Henry J. Raymond, the New York journalist, died of old age, at the residence of her grandd aughter, Mrs. De Forest, of Jackson, on the night of the 5th.

A FIRE at Hudson, on the 5th, destroyed the buildings occupied by two groceries, a billiard hall and millinery shop. Loss, $5,000. No insurance.

STEPHENS' sawmills, at Fish Lake, were destroyed by fire, recently. A large number of men are thrown out of employment. Loss, $80,000; insurance, $15,000.

IT is said that a great deal of pine has been cut in the Government land in Chippewa County during the past winter.

ON the 6th, two daughters of James Norton, while bathing in Black Lake, were drowned. The mother, in attempting to save them, was also drowned.

THE Democratic State Convention was held at Lansing, on the 10th. The following State ticket was nominated: For Governor, Charles M. Barnes, of Lansing; Lieutenant-Governor, A. P. Swineford; Secretary of State, George H. Murdock; State Treasurer, Alexander McFarlin; Commissioner of the State Land Office, George Lord; Auditor-General, W. T. B. Schermerhorn; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Prof. Trueedell; Attorney-General, Maj. Allen B. Morse; Member of the Board of Education, Edwin F. Uhl. The State Central Committee was constituted as follows: William B. Moran, of Detroit, Chairman; First District, William Brodie, Alexander V. Copeland; Second District, Ira B. Card; George M. Landon; Third District, D. B. Hodgson, W. W. Van Antwerp; Fourth District, G. O. Briggs, Henry B. Murdock; Fifth District, Charles E. Godwin, J. B. Hutchins; Sixth District, J. Eddy, George P. Sanford; Eighth District, E. F. Sprague, George L. Burrows; Ninth District, T. W. Edwards, F. A. Wood. The following resolutions were adopted:

The Democratic party of the State of Michigan in convention assembled, reasserting its fidelity to its time-honored principles, standing for a sacred preservation of the National credit and the Nation's faith, for the Constitution and the laws, and for the great truth that the life and preservent of the people, where the will of the people should control, and preserving the business men of the city visit the splendid coffee saloons on the Ringstrasse, and they are remarkable for their elegant equipages, their appointments and the evident care which has been taken in their morning toilet. There are no signs of poverty. It has plainly been said that the Austrian capital can would double from their personal appearance or features to be Germans. They might be taken for Americans, if they were not so fat. Many of them are mostly robust and hearty specimens of humanity, with healthy complexions, and evidently not much troubled with dyspepsia. The officers of the Austrian Army, who are very numerous in Vienna, are of fine-looking men, and their elegantly fitting uniforms and pound jackets show off their forms to great advantage. The Hungarian officers are equally fine-looking, and they promenade the streets and music gardens with the air of men who know that they are objects of admiration. The men in the lower classes of life are, however neither handsome, well formed nor graceful in their motions. The Austrian soldier is generally short and ungainly in appearance, whilst the Hungarian regiments are known to the stranger by their fine forms and martial carriage.—Cor. Baltimore American.

EN ROUTE.

The pantoum is a metre borrowed by the modern French romantic poets from Malayan poesy. It consists of a series of four-line stanzas. The second and fourth line of each stanza reappearing as the first and third lines of the next stanza. It is to be noted that the Malayan pantoum resembles the old French rondeau in that the opening words recur at the end.

Here we are riding the rail,
Gliding from out of the station,
Man thought I am; I am rail.
Certain of load and vexation.

Gliding from out of the station,
Out from the city we loathe.
Certain of load and vexation,
Note to be covered with dust.

Out from the city we loathe,
Rattling we run o'er the bridges.
Note to be covered with dust,
Shrilly the whistle sharply dirges.

Rattling we run o'er the bridges,
Bounding we dash o'er the plain;
Shrilly the whistle sharply dirges,
Certain premonitory pain.

Bounding we dash o'er the plain,
Watching the shadows slowly lowering,
Certain premonitory pain,
Lurid volcanoes of steam.

Watching the shadows slowly lowering,
Flecks about us begin to fall,
Pass with the books' needs a spark.

Flecks about us begin to fall,
Black here to light up a book,
Pass with the books' needs a spark,
No friend want a new novel!

Black here to light up a book,
Small specks of dust in my ear.
No friend want a new novel!
Babes beginning to cry.

Small specks of dust in my ear,
I will not buy papers or candy.
Babes beginning to cry,
Oh, for a bonebon's body!

I will not buy papers or candy!
Train boys deserve to be slain.
Oh, for a bonebon's body!
Oh, for the cool of the rain!

Train boys deserve to be slain,
Heat and the dust they are stinking,
Oh, for the cool of the rain!
Sweat on my forehead is sticking.

Heat and the dust they are stinking,
Clogging and filling my pores,
Sweat on my forehead is sticking,
Gems just in front of me oozes.

Clogging and filling my pores,
Here we are riding the rail;
Gad! but of travel I'm sick,
Man thought I am; I am rail.

Faces are on edge at the rail,
Man thought I am I am pale,
Sounds like the noise of a battle,
Gad! but of travel I'm sick.

"AS COMPANION TO A LADY."

"I'm very sorry, miss, but I'm only a poor woman myself, and if you can't pay the rent of this room, I don't see as you can afford the rent of the one up-stairs."

Here the landlady rubbed her nose viciously upon her apron, and stared straight out of the very dirty window.

As this was evidently a challenge to me to reply, I said, as firmly as I could, a few words which brought out the worst of the woman's vice: that of insolence.

"Am I to understand, then, that you wish me to go?"

"If you please, miss, at the end of the week, for there's the rent on the first-floor would like to have this bedroom."

"Very well, Mrs. Ruddock. I said; I will find a room elsewhere."

"Thanky, miss!" she said, sharply; and giving her nose another vicious rub, she left me to my thoughts—and my tears.

For I was weak, faint and heartsick, and the coins in my purse had dwindled down, so that if I did not succeed in obtaining employment in a very few days I had no resource but to creep back to the country and avow my failure.

Just three months since, and we were all so happy in the little country vicarage; and then, in visiting one of his people, my poor father caught a dangerous fever, while in tending him my dear mother was stricken with the same complaint, and are three weeks had passed Mima and I sat in the little study alone, in deep black, for the struggle had been brief, and those we loved best were sleeping side by side in the yard, and we were only intruders now in the little vicarage that had been our home.

We were nearly penniless, too, but a brother clergyman of my father's, quite as poor, came forward and offered us a temporary home till, as he said, some opening should occur for us.

I gladly accepted it for Mima; but for myself I was determined to try my great London, and, mustering all my courage, I left her to nurse the baby for me.

Two years John Murray was to come back from Australia to fetch me for his wife, and till then I would be independent. So the day came at last when, with many tears, we two girls had to separate, and, with aching heart, I left the old Lincolnshire home and reached the great, dreary void of London early one afternoon.

I was not long in finding a place where I could stay, in the shape of a second-floor front room in one of those heart-rending streets near the Bromlingstreets that echo from morning to night with mournful cries, uttered by venders whose goods it is impossible to surmise, and with the dismal, echoing tones of the various organs. So painful were these last to me, that often of an evening, when I have returned from a weary, disheartening search for an engagement, and sat alone and hungry, fearing to spend my money in anything beyond the tea and bread and butter upon which I existed, these doleful strains—cheering, maybe, to some—have had such an effect upon me that I have sat and sobbed till, utterly worn out, I have fallen asleep, to wake, perhaps, hours after, to find it very late, and cravel, shivering, off to bed.

As the weeks passed on, and my advertisements and fees paid to the various registry offices had been without effect, I used to crawl back to my room, growing more and more disheartened. I was always a pitiful, sallow-looking girl, and now, in my last-wearing black, I began to feel that I was day by day growing more sunken and weary-looking, and that my feeble chances of obtaining a post were growing less and less.

I used to sit and ask myself whether I had tried hard—and I knew I had—but it was always the same. Whether I advertised for a situation as governess, or went from a registry office to another in search of some with letters and messages for you."

"I'm very much obliged, Mrs. Ruddock," I said, gently, as I took the letters from with trembling hands, while muttering and complaining, their owner went down stairs. It seemed very hard then, but I believe it was this woman's last, and that she was not so bad at heart, but warped and cankered by poverty, hard work and ill-usage from a drunken husband, whom she entirely kept.

One letter I saw at a glance was from Mima; the other was in a strange, troubled hand; and I longed to read them; but, exercising my self-denial, I dressed, lit my fire, and prepared my very frugal breakfast before sitting down and devouring Mima's news.

What right had I to murmur as I did last night, I asked myself, when she loved her so dearly and sometimes yearned and then I opened, with fluttering hand, the other letter, and was puzzled by it at first; but at last I recalled the fact that three weeks before I had answered an advertisement in the Times, where a lady wanted a companion.

The name was very brief and curt and ran as follows:

"If Miss Laurrie is not engaged she can call upon Mrs. Langton Porter, 47 Morton street, Park Village South, at eleven o'clock to-morrow (Thursday.")

"At last!" I said to myself, joyfully, and with beating heart I prepared myself for my journey, for the appointment was for that morning.

Just as I had pretty well tired myself for my walk a sudden squall came on, the sky was darkened, snow fell heavily, and in place of murmuring in spring we seemed to have gone back into winter, for the snow lay thickly in a very short time, and the branches of the trees in the squares were whitened.

Weak as I was this disheartened me, but I fought my way bravely on, and just at eleven rang timidly at the door of an important-looking house, and was superciliously shown, by a stout tall footman in drab livery, into a handsomely-furnished room. Everything in the place I noticed was rich and good; nearly curtains hung by window and door, skins and Eastern rugs lay on the polished wood floor, and a tremendous fire blazed in a great brass fireplace. and the flames danced and were reflected from the encaustic tiles with which it was surrounded.

"I'll take your mesiem," said the footman, as I blanded it, "you can sit down."

I preferred to stand, and as soon as I was alone I shivered with fear and cold, as I caught a glimpse of my pale, sallow face in a great mirror. Every moment I expected to see the owner of the place, but I remained standing wearily for an hour, and then I sighed and turned wistfully to look at the door, wondering whether the footman had taken in the note which I had given him as my passport.

I started, for close behind me, having entered unheard, was a rather plump lady in black. She was dressed as if for going out, and well wrapped in furs.

"Oh! you are waiting," she said, hurriedly, and a shade of displeasure crossed her face as she looked full at me till my eyes dropped. "There, Miss—Miss—Miss—"

"Laurrie," I suggested.

"Yes, yes; I know," she said, sharply; "it is in my mute. Pray, why in the name of common sense did you not sit down? Take that chair. Now, then, have you been companion to a lady before?"

"No, ma'am," I replied; and then, in answer to her questions all very sharply given, I told her so much as was necessary of my story.

"I don't think you will suit me," she said; "I've had misery enough, and I want someone cheerful and pleasant, a lady-helper I can trust and who will be a pleasant companion. There, I'm sure there is not such a body in London, for the way I've been imposed upon is dreadful! I've had six in six months, and the number of applications I have had nearly drove me out of my senses. I've had no one since you wrote to me—a creature whose sole idea was herself. I want one who will make me her first consideration. I don't mind what I pay, but I want some one tall and ladylike; and you are not pretty, you know."

I shook my head sadly.

"Humph! Well," she went on, "your son? Is she giddy and be always thinking of getting married? There, you need not blush like that; it's what all the companions I have had seem to think about. You don't, I suppose?"

"I am engaged to be married," I said, hanging down my head, "in a couple of years."

"Bo! What he mustn't come here, for I'm a very selfish, pragmatical old woman; and if I engaged you—which I don't think I shall do—I should want you all to myself. What is he?"

"A settler—abroad," I faltered.

"Ho! That's better, and perhaps he'll settle there altogether without you."

I looked at her indignantly, and she went on:

"Ah! I know, my good girl. I haven't lived to eight and forty for nothing. How old are you?"

"Twenty," I said, shivering, for her rough way repelled me, and I longed to bring the interview to an end.

"What is your name?" she said, roughly. "H'm, twenty! Here, gum up to the fire, and have a good warm; it's dreadful freezing out. There, pull off your bonnet and jacket. Put them on that chair, and go closer to the fire; I've a deal to say to you yet, for I'm not going to engage any young person and have to change directly."

I observed her trembling the while, for I was very weak; and she went on asking me questions and making comments.

"I don't like your appearance at all; you look pale and unhealthy. Not a bit like a girl from the country."

"I am very sorry," I said; "but, indeed, my ill health is my greatest fault."

"Then your face tells stories about you. You play, of course?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"You're warm now. Go and play something. Can you sing?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Then sing, too; and look here, Miss—Miss—Miss—"

I was about to tell her my name, but remembering the last rebuff I was silent.

"Now, look here, my good young lady, how am I to remember your troublesome name? What is it?"

"Laurrie, ma'am," I replied.

"Of course it is; I remember it quite well. Now go and play and sing something, and mind, I don't want my ears deafened with fireworks, and the piano shut with parrot-shriek bravuras. Sing something sweet and simple and old-fashioned, if you can," she added, ungraciously.

I crossed the room and sat down in the magnificent piano, and for the next eleven o'clock to-morrow (Thursday.")

"At last!" I said to myself, joyfully, and with beating heart I prepared myself for my journey, for the appointment was for that morning.

"So—hm—h'm—dair," she sang, as I rose, in a not unpleasing voice. "Now let me hear you read. OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, July 26, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

As a general rule I haven't much of an opinion of a man who talks about the weather, and as to the man who writes about it—unless indeed he is Old Probabilities Noyes or some other high-salaried signal service officer—he is simply a natural criminal. Nothing in the world is so utterly and wilfully unpardonable as to have a fellow come up to you while you are mopping your countenance or wiping out of your neck the beads that are rapidly welling your clean collar and with his inane grin say, "Pretty warm enough for you?" I mention these facts to prove that I have not the slightest interest in the subject, but want it understood to do what little in the matter appertains to one's mind, when the papers are filled with nothing else, and when even the dogs in the street paint their complaints and commiseration to each other at every corner.

I don't know what the matter is with this town, in defiance of the modern law, but twenty or thirty entirely unlike matter to us than usual as whether the blame is to be laid at the Lower floor, for starting this about when "were." But settle the responsibility as you please, the fact remains that we are visited with a most distressing state of the atmosphere. The story of Sheshach, Meshach and Abednego has always furnished one of the best arguments to the literal minded scoffer at Scripture truth but, our survival, though the past week is almost enough to shut their mouths, for it is not much of an exaggeration to say that, New York has been a fiery furnace for several days. Every pore in our bodies is like an Artesian well, flowing night and day, and, to make our condition more pitiable, the air, even with the mercury bumping its head against the top of the glass, seems so saturated with moisture as to have lost all power of absorbing the perspiration.

While our location is near the ocean renders our plight more tolerable than that of the western cities from which we have such terrible reports of suffering and death, the heat has still pressed very heavily upon New York City. Many cases of sun stroke are reported, but they represent only a small part of the casualities. The majority of fatal cases are not sudden enough to be classed under that head. They occur in the packed tenements, where there is bad ventilation and worse scavenge, and where women and children and the sick of all ages and both sexes have died by the hundred, actually smothered to death. Business is neglected as far as possible, and not even the veriest Grandgrind of the counting house find it in their hearts to complain that our humane Postmaster James has temporarily intermitted the midday delivery of mail matter by the overworked and underpaid army of letter carriers—something which has not occurred before since the news poll at the centennial summer.

But, whew! I find it don't make me any cooler to write about our burning miseries, so let us change the subject.

On Wednesday morning that ever watchful Afrikin of journalism Mr. Jas Gordon Bennett, having graciously decided some days previous to honor his native land with a call, stepped ashore from the French steamer St. Laurent, and stood upon the dock in glorious magnificence during the unloading and custom-house inspection of his baggage, which, judging from accounts, must have formed the larger part of the ship's cargo. It consisted of no less than 128 pieces, comprising of trunks, packing cases, bags, packages of guns, umbrellas, canes, and sporting implements. His horses, carriages, and Polo ponies and various other cattle had preceded their lord and master, and were already ensconced in their quarters at Newport, whither Mr. Bennett and his sister, who has accompanied him everywhere in Europe, and who now returns with him immediately hurried.

Miss Bennett, it is said, is to be married in this city. It seems a great mistake that Bennett will not have an English lord, as surely he is imitate the appearance and habits of that "effete aristocracy." He owns property in states in different parts of the world, including a "shooting box" in England, and the regulation "hotel" in Paris, and evidently feels more at home in either of the latter than in any part of this country. His stay here will be short. He cares for about this "demited country" more than a few months at a time, and before winter has in will be recruiting behind with all his retinue of men and beasts in one of his foreign residences.

Two cases noted legit vs from justice have been brought into court to answer for their crimes within ten days. The first to be apprehended was William E. Gray, the prince of forgers and confidence men, who in 1873 put many New Yorkers in Wall street, who wanted some half a million from him, and whose subsequent history in England and on the Continent, reads like the most wildly improbable dime novel. He eluded the law for nine years, but was at last apprehended and brought back to New York, where he now awaits trial. Very shortly after the arrest of Gray, Edward Oakley, a bank teller, was found to have embezzled $40,000. He was indicted in January, 1876, but jumped his bail and ran away to Canada. Lately he ventured back to within his breath and on Thursday was arrested and absorbed like Gray, in durance vile. Chickens, curses, and criminals always come home to roost.

The Home Insurance Company are out with their official semi-annual statement, a document which, as this company has never been so much as suspected of taking such liberties with [illegible] as corporations of the kind are apt to do, shows the thoroughly sound and prosperous condition of one of our oldest and best fire companies. The statement shows a net surplus of considerably over a million of dollars, a reserve of two millions, and a cash capital of three millions, giving for the protection of its policyholders assets aggregation between six and seven millions of money.

We are now experiencing the regulation sense, which comes around every summer in about the same shape, over the breaking out of terrible epidemics. It is only about a week ago that we were startled with the report of two deaths each by in Connecticut, from Asiatic cholera, and now we have the cheering intelligence of six cases of yellow fever in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, of which three have already terminated fatally. These occurrences will furnish us with pleasant food for thought until the setting in of the hydrophobia season, which cannot be much longer delayed.

RADIX.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you,—your unremediable prejudice and scepticism, which has baffled thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of Liver Complaint, or Dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, belching, nervousness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. In other more recent years than the Western continent and not a druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents. Three doses will relieve you.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is deranged in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the working of the Liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequaled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. For sale by Geo W. Crenter.

GOODS!

Special Announcement

OF

TO

The People of Charlevoix County and Vicinity.

We desire to call your attention to an unquestioned fact: That we offer this year as fine and as varied an assortment of goods as has ever been offered in Charlevoix. We intend that our customers shall find in our store every article legitimately pertaining to our trade. SPECIAL BARGAINS may be always found at the extensive store of FOX, ROSE & BUTTARS, in their large stock of Dress Goods for ladies, misses and children's wear. In all the latest and most desirable styles and colors to be found in the market: Black Mohairs, Black Alpaces, Black Cashimere, Black and Colored Trimming Silks, and hundreds of other articles too numerous to mention.

WHAT YOUR EYES SEE

Let Your Minds be Convinced of,

In times like these, when everybody is advertising goods very cheap, we would say, go to the extensive store of FOX, ROSE & BUTTARS. Look through their extensive stock of Fall and Winter Goods, and then judge for yourselves if they have not the and most desirable stock of goods ever brought to Charlevoix, and where prices suit all, and satisfaction is guaranteed to all.

LARGEST

THE INVESTIGATION.

THE Potter Committee met on the 9th. Mr. Butler being absent. A secret session was held at which a recent letter from Secretary Sherman was considered. In this letter Mr. Sherman states that the Committee had accepted evidence tending to prove fact existed of intimidation and bad treatment at the elections in certain parishes in Louisiana, and stated that, therefore, in justice they had the right, to some that account, whipping and all forms of intimidation did prevent in such parishes, and must in order not to disenfranchise voters from casting the ballot. Mr. Sherman also stated that he was prepared to submit testimony, at the convenience of the Committee in Washington, to rebut the charges against him. Information being received by the Committee that Gen. Butler would not arrive until the 11th, an adjournment was had until that date.

A special to the Chicago Tribune says the Committee, at its executive session, decided to call for the witnesses asked for by Secretary Sherman the Republican visiting statesmen to Louisiana.

THE Committee resumed its session on the 11th. Gen. Butler being present and conducting the examination of Senator Kellogg of Louisiana. Witness said the elections in the State in 1876 were entirely legal. He gave a detailed statement of the organization of the Legislature, and stated that Gen. Packard was legally inaugurated as the Governor of that State in 1876 was

"I AM a constant reader of the Sentinel, and am interested in the local items in it and already gleaning the crops it will yield the coming season. The crops of Charlevoix on the ground look well, the rye and clover are models to view. A more comfortable place to float than a raft or a shingle bolt could not be reminded.

"Gen. Grant and Zach. Chandler," remarks an Eastern independent paper, "must square and trade, with heavy sacrifice and opprobrium heaped on them, or the incoming very popular with the American people in three days of Communists, tramps, demagogues, and repudiators."

The greenbacks that paid the cost of fighting the battles of the Union, and were worth at one time only thirty-five cents on the dollar, are now as good as coin. Right at this time the rebel sympathizers who denounced them originally, and did all they could to depreciate them, want to send them on their downward course again. The result would be their Coin for the benefited ar, and depreciated paper for workingmen.

A recent joke was developed the other day in connection with the complaints against the management of the New York Post Office, showing how absurdly malicious and ridiculous some can get. The Postmaster received a written charge that the writer, a boy, had been kicked by one of the men who run the elevator. It was discovered first, that no such person existed at the address given, second, that all the men who run the elevator have not one eg egree.

The time was when it took two $10 greenbacks to buy a barrel of flour. Now you can buy a barrel of flour for one $10 bill and have $1 left to purchase provisions or clothing. These are the kind of shifts people are put to, and by making our present funds of greenbacks equal in value to gold and silver, that is the kind they will be worth hereafter. This is what specie-resumption means, and this is what the so called "National" and "Greenbacks" who oppose specie resumption will favor the loss of absolute paper money, would prevent. If they could. Hence it is the only measure to be called political blatherskites.

It is well known that in no portion of the world are wages so high as they are in the United States, and that the industrial classes are better fed, better clothed, and more liberally educated here than elsewere. Can these conditions be attributed to aught else than the policy of protection to home industries? Reverse that policy, and under a free-trade tariff our markets would, in less than ninety days, be filled with the products of half-paid foreign artisans and workingmen. The problem admits of no other solution. Free trade would give employment to the industrial classes abroad, and to the same extent take the work from our own people. It enriches English, German and French manufacturers and impoverishes those of our own country; feeds foreign operatives and starves our own

THE steamer Gazelle took about 90 Charlevoix people to Bay View Camp Meeting Sunday. The Resort people have chartered her for Wednesday for the same purpose.

PERSONAL.—J. E. Darr, of the Burlington Record, and R. P. Bishop, of the same place, made us a friendly call Thursday.

—At the Fountain City House:—Martin A. Ryerson, W. S. McCrea, John McMillen, Chicago; S. Coleman, Jr., St. Louis, Mo.; Elmer Crockett, of South Bend Tribune; W. Shurman, Geo. H. Danton, Mrs. Berge, Grand Rapids; J. T. Dezell, Morley; W. J. U. Schutzer, Detroit.

—J. J. Swigert and wife who have been stopping here for the past week, left Sunday for Chicago. Mr. Swigert is Treasurer of the Smith Bridge Co., of Toledo, Ohio.

—Albert Trask, Esq., an attorney of of East Saginaw, is stopping with his brother-in-law, J. Milo Eaton, in this place. His family are with him.

—Wilson McCausland and wife, of Philadelphia, are in town, the guests of Co. Treasurer See, of whom Mr. McCausland is a brother in law.

—Prof. D. Proctor, of the State Normal School at Ypsylanto, accompanied by his wife, arrived in town Friday to spend a few weeks.

—A. B. Turner, of Grand Rapids, and Dell McLean, of Bay City, left here last week for the north shore in McLean's sailing yacht.

—F. S. Blandford and J. W. Sheldon, and wife, of Albion, Mich, are in town, the guests of L. D. Bartholomew.

—Chester See, of this village, left here Sunday for a visit among friends in Wisconsin.

—H. J. Martin, of Vernonville, was here yesterday.

RELIGIOUS.—President Brooks occupied the M. E. pulpit Sunday morning.

—Rev. F. E. Kittridge, a Unitarian preacher and lecturer of prominence, will occupy the M. E. pulpit next Sunday. He will also deliver one of his best lectures some evening during the following week.

Do not forget that Carpenter & Bartholomew keep a good assortment of tobacco at prices that cant be beat.

MARINE.—Cleared during the week: scows Hercules, Blue Belle, Alaska, Supply; schooners Higby and Emma. Now in port, scow Christy and schooner Evening Star.

—The propeller Menominee went ashore in the straits last week, but was released without damage. Fog was the cause.

THE Steamer Gazelle will take a crowd of Charlevoix people to Mackinaw on Thursday, to attend the ceremonies of instituting the Marquette Memorial Association. Many eminent personages are expected to be there. The fare will be one dollar for the round trip.

D. C. NETTLETON, of this place, has been appointed Government Inspector of the Charlevoix Harbor work, at a salary of four dollars per day including Sundays.

THE HARBOR CONTRACT.—H. S. Dole, of Chicago, was the successful bidder for the Charlevoix harbor contract. He does the work called for in the specifications for $7,887,87. This leaves quite a margin for work not contemplated in the estimate

New dry goods and groceries every week at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

A tramp tried Sunday to bamboozle the Town Board into pecuniary help under the poor law, but they very properly couldn't see it. Several jobs of work presented themselves, but he, in his turn, couldn't see that. Ten to one he's a greenbacker.

REMEMBER the steamer Gazelle's excursion to Mackinac Wednesday night. To those who have never visited the historic ground of Mackinac this is an excellent opportunity;—fare only $1 for the round trip, and less than that if more than thirty participate.

CAUCUS.—A Republican Caucus will be held at the Town Hall in Charlevoix on Wednesday evening, Aug. 7, for the purpose of electing delegates to the County Convention. By Order of Committee.

THE Grand Traverse Herald is out with a strong editorial favoring Representative Hubbell's renomination.

DR. LEWIS has a new buggy, built by Andrew Mudge, ironed by Robert Miller, painted by J. A. Bartram, and upholstered by the Wood brothers—all in Charlevoix—which would be a credit to many a larger town.

From all parts of Charlevoix County we hear reports of the excellent results of harvest. The grain yield has been abundant, and crops yet remaining unharvested give equal promise of large yield.

C. & B.'s stock of crockery and glass ware is very complete.

THE State M. E. Camp Meeting has been in progress at Bay View, near Petoskey, for the past week, and will continue during the present. The attendance was large, and the interest very satisfactory. On Sunday afternoon, Mrs. Dr. Lathrop, of Jackson, occupied the pulpit. Her sermon was eloquent, logical and convincing. Many eminent divines are in attendance.

D. L. FILER, of Ludington, has his agents out throughout this Congressional District picking up the strings for his own nomination to Congress this fall. Filer's ambition must be gratified, you know, if we do have to throw a good servant overboard in order to do it. But Charlevoix county is very well satisfied with Hubbell, and her vote will undoubtedly be cast for his re nomination.

Best goods lowest prices at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

WITH rapid strides Charlevoix is advancing to the front rank of Northern Resorts. As a shipping point, its importance has been recognized by the Government, and appropriations are yearly made for our already accessible and commodious harbor. As a farming country the region adjacent to Charlevoix is a mine of agricultural wealth which needs only industry to develop.

C. & B. are selling tea 5¼ lbs for 100 but their celebrated 50cts tea is the cheapest.

THE Petoskey Record calls the attention of outside people to the superior adaptability of this country to stock-raising, and we echo the sentiment. The story of long, severe winters in Northern Michigan is a proven bally accepted fact among those in more southern latitudes, but it is untrue, nevertheless. Cattle do well here, and experience has proven that stock-raising can be made one of the most profitable branches of husbandry.

THE Petoskey Record thinks the Baptists "made a mistake in locating at Charlevoix." Yes, everything is a mistake that does not work to the glory of Petoskey, the Babylon of the North—the shrine of poker players. Everything that fails to drop into the hungry maws of the voracious gluttons brings out a growl of envy. Had Charlevoix the rail road connection that Petoskey enjoys, the latter place would be forgotten in one change of the moon. Make a memorandum of that for future reference, Mr. Record. As it is, the natural adaptability of Charlevoix as a summer resort so far overshadows that of Petoskey that the very slight difference in accessibility fades into insignificance. Don't talk any more about "mistakes."

Maine Republicanism is of the wholesome sort on the financial question. The platform shows marks of the vigor and ability of Mr. Blaine's leadership

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 16th says it was understood that no formal opinion had been given by the Attorney-General to the Secretary of the Treasury, concerning the exchange of gold for Treasury notes; but the Secretary and the Attorney-General were agreed that this could not be done until Jan. 1, next. The Treasury Department had, however, the option of paying gold on Government account at any time, and smaller gold coins are said to be likely to get into circulation in this manner. The coin-balance was said to still show a steady increase, and at the close of business, on the 16th, amounted to $98,586,000.

SEC'Y SHERMAN has instructed the United States Assistant Treasurers to pay out standard silver dollars to all parties wishing to disburse them on Government pay-rolls, and to exchange them with Government depositaries for $1 and $2 notes.

ON the 17th, Sec'y Sherman issued his sixty-second call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of 1865. The amount called for was $5,000,000—interest to cease on the 17th of October.

THE boiler in a planing-mill, at Barnesville, Ohio, exploded on the morning of the 18th, destroying the building and killing three persons instantly. Three more were fatally, and several badly injured.

A HOUSE CITY (Idaho) dispatch of the 16th says it was not true that the Umatillas had joined the hostiles. One hundred other warriors had joined Col. Forsyth, and after a fight, on the 15th, with the hostiles had brought in twenty-two scalps and 300 horses.

ABOUT twenty deaths from sunstroke occurred in St. Louis, on the 17th, thirty-one in Chicago, fourteen in Milwaukee, and several in other localities. The temperature in St. Louis ranged from 97 to 102 deg.; in Chicago from 86 to 100 deg., and in Milwaukee about the same.

A RECENT Washington telegram says the amount of currency outstanding on the 30th of June last was as follows:

HOT WEATHER was experienced in Washington, on the 16th, the thermometer indicating 100 deg. in the shade, in the afternoon. Public and private business was partially suspended because of the heat.

NEW YORK, Boston and other Eastern cities suffered from extreme heat, on the 18th, the thermometer ranging from 90 to 98 deg. The weather throughout the West was generally more comfortable, and temperature much lower than for several days.

THE number of suicides in this country, reported in the newspapers during the year ending July 1st, was nearly 2,000, and the number of murders during the same period exceeded 1,500. Most of the suicides are attributed to mental aberration caused by financial or domestic troubles, and many of the murders to strong drink or jealousy.

A BAKER CITY (Ore.) dispatch of the 18th says the Umatilla Indians under Furnish killed seventeen hostile warriors, on the night of the 17th, and captured seventy-five women and children and about sixty head of horses. The hostiles were much demoralized. On the same evening, a man named Haines, Captain of a volunteer company, killed a friendly Nez Perce scout, and mortally wounded another. The Nez Perces were much incensed at Haines, and would scarcely continue longer in the service, and it was also feared the friendly Umatillas would abandon the field. Haines was under guard.

THE Superintendents of the Philadelphia Mint and the New York Assay Office have been directed to purchase silver coin dollars and United States trade dollars at an equivalent of the London rate for silver on the day of purchase, less ½ per cent. per ounce, payable in standard silver dollars.

ON the 20th, the regular miscellaneous bids for carrying the mails on upward of 700 routes were closed by the Postoffice Department. The awards would soon be made.

A ST. LOUIS dispatch says the number of deaths in that city, up to and including the 20th, caused directly or indirectly by the heat, since the hot term set in on the 8th of July, was 184.

UP to the 22d, the Treasury Department, at Washington, had received from National Banks, since the notification on the 18th that silver dollars could be obtained for greenbacks, free of transportation, orders for $310,000 in silver.

A RECENT official synopsis of the crop reports shows the average condition of rye and barley at 101; oats, general average, 101; fruit, favorable; grass and cover, remarkably fine; tobacco acreage reduced about 25 per cent. Recent information indicated very serious damage, from various causes, to the spring wheat crop in Minnesota, Northern Iowa and Wisconsin.

A CYCLONE struck Albany, N. Y., on the afternoon of the 21st, destroying a number of large structures in the northern part of the city. No lives were lost, but property valued at $100,000 was leveled to the ground.

ON the afternoon of the 22d, the business portion of the Town of Cattettsburg, in Kentucky, was destroyed by fire. Loss, $250,000.

AT Elmwood, Ill., on the evening of the 20th, L. D. Atchison made a trapeze balloon ascension. When 200 feet high he lost his hold on the trapeze, and was dashed headlong to the earth. He was instantly killed.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

GEN. E. A. MERRITT, the new Collector of the Port of New York, qualified on the 18th.

THE New Hampshire Republican State Convention is to be held on the 10th, and the Democratic on the 12th, of September.

THE Executive Committee of the National party of Indiana have put Robert Gregory, of Lafayette, on the State ticket for Secretary of State, in place of David Moss, who has been nominated for Congress in the Eleventh District. C. C. Post, of Indianapolis, has been elected Secretary of the Committee.

JAMES GORDON BENNETT arrived at New York, on the 16th, from Europe.

IN Chicago, on the morning of the 17th, the monument and statue erected to the memory of the late Stephen A. Douglas were formally unveiled in the presence of about 1,000 spectators. Ex-Chief-Justice Caton delivered the address.

A CONVENTION of representatives of the Illinois State Greenback Clubs met, in Chicago, on the 17th, and adopted a series of resolutions (introduced by "Brick" Pomeroy, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions), declaring that a conspiracy exists in the country, under the leadership of the leaders and chiefs of the Democratic and Republican parties, including the present National Administration, to establish a financial despotism over the commercial and working classes of the country; that the Greenback and Labor party will fight such movement to the bitter end; that the Greenback must be a full legal-tender money to be alone issued by the General Government; calling for a National Greenback Labor Convention, to be called by the duly-chartered National Greenback Clubs of the United States, etc.

E. J. OAKLEY, the absconding Cashier of the Merchants' Exchange National Bank of New York, who embezzled $500,000 and fled with it to Canada in 1870, returned to New York, on the 18th, and was arrested. He declared that he was utterly penniless.

THE Colorado State Democratic Convention was held at Pueblo, on the 17th and 18th. Hon. W. A. H. Loveland was nominated for Governor, T. M. Field for Lieutenant-Governor and Hon. Thomas N. Patterson for Member of Congress. The platform adopted condemns the extravagance of the Republican party, and charges it with being the cause of the hard times and financial depression; indorses the Potter Investigation; favors rigid economy in public expenditures; condemns the use of the army as a posse comitatus; favors the repeal of the Resumption act; demands a joint for Colorado, etc., etc.

GEN. CHARLES K. GRAHAM has been appointed Surveyor of Customs, at New York, to succeed Gen. Merritt, appointed Collector.

EPPA HUNTON, M. C. from Virginia, has challenged Columbus Alexander, of Washington, to fight a duel, the difficulty growing out of the assertion by the former, in a political speech, that the latter favored a certain District bill while the former was instrumental in passing. Mr. Alexander pronounced the statement, that he favored the bill, a lie. Mr. A. is President of the Taxpayers' Association of the District of Columbia.

BERTON telegrams of the 22d announce the defalcation of Mr. John H. Tappan, late President of the Boston Belting Company. His shortage is variously fixed at from $500,000 to $600,000. The company, pending a thorough investigation of its affairs, has suspended, though its speedy resumption was expected. Mr. Tappan has assigned to the company property of the nominal value of $1,100,000, to make good the amount embezzled. Speculation in outside enterprises is said to have led to the defalcation.

FOREIGN.

On their arrival in England, on the 16th, Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury, the British representatives to the Congress, were accorded a most enthusiastic reception.

MISS M. JOLEY, the distinguished French Ballad advocate, has committed suicide.

On the 21st, the Queen invested LADY Beaconsfield with the Order of the Garter.

THE state of siege has been raised in Servia.

Bear Hunting in Russia.

The following singular means of capturing or killing the bear is said to be frequently practiced by Russian peasants who cannot easily procure fire-arms. As is well known, the bear has a fondness for honey, and will track his way a great distance to where the wild bees have filled some hollow tree. Their stings cannot hurt him, and they and their stores are entirely at his mercy. In a forest known to contain bears, the hunters examine all the hollow trees. A branch of the tree is then chosen, directly above the hole; if there is an ash, a stout peg is driven into the trunk. To this peg a strong cord is fastened, and to the end of the cord a heavy stone or a cannon-ball is suspended, at about half a foot from the ground. The bear in his researches on us upon the treasures of honey. The pendulous mass darkens and incommodes him a good deal. He is an irritable beast—in such cases one of the most irritable as well as stupid in the forest. He begins by shoving the weight or stone one side; but it presses against his head, and he gives it a slight knock to get free himself of the inconvenience. It recoils a moment, and he receives a smart tap on the ear. His temper is roused, and he again pushes off the hard and heavy mass, but more violently; he gets rather a heavy blow on the side of his skull, on the temple, on the region of visions, and with a powerful jerks sends the rock swinging away. The pendulum has resumed its first line of oscillations, and with a gamble in which the blows are felt on one side exclusively. The bear alone suffers; and presently he is seen to descend from the tree, and make off, growling and howling, to his den, where he licks his wounds and meditates revenge.

Another Enoch Arden.

Truth is always stranger than fiction, but we can only be made to believe it by startling cases like this. Tennyson has immortalized "Enoch Arden," but this story of William G. Raines, while it has all the pathetic features of the poem, surpasses it in thrilling incidents and adventures. Ten years ago Mr. Raines was a resident of our neighboring Village of Hendrysburg, where he followed the occupation of a carpenter. He was married and had one child; but, thinking that he could better his fortunes, he left his family and sought employment in the East, expecting to return in a few months. During his absence he was engaged by his uncle to make a nine-months' cruise to Calcutta in a merchant vessel, on good Hope. He wrote an affectionate letter to his wife, inclosing $200, informing her of his intended voyage and expressing the hope that upon his return they would be able to live happily together. The vessel sailed, and while in mid-ocean another letter was sent to his wife. After that, no word was received by his friends from the lost man, and it was believed that the vessel had gone down with all on board. After waiting three years, and hoping against hope, Mrs. Raines at last concluded that her husband had found a watery grave, and, yielding to the solicitations of a young lover, she abandoned her widow's weeds and once more became a bride. The second husband left her in a few months, and she was again left alone with her little girl. Her husband had been a contractor on the National Road near St. Clairsville.

The third act opens with the unexpected return of Mr. Raines. The vessel was really wrecked on the west coast of Africa, north of Cape Town. Mr. Raines and his uncle, with four other men, succeeded in reaching shore in a boat, but were soon after captured by the natives. The prisoners were marched 650 miles into the interior. Each tribe took one of his men and kept him as a curiosity. Raines was divested of his clothing while on exhibition and subjected to long marches of miles to see the wonderful white man. He was the special protege of the King, and was regarded with affection by the whole tribe. But the prisoner pined for freedom, and hoped that far beyond the burning sands and the rolling hills of the sea he might find again his wife and child. Inspired by these thoughts, about a year ago he made a desperate attempt for liberty, and escaping from the tribe, he managed, after many hardships, to reach Cape Town, where he engaged as a sailor, and three weeks ago landed at San Francisco, and immediately started for Ohio. He arrived at Caldwell, and learned for the first time that his wife had married three years after his supposed death. Unlike Enoch, he did not decide but, with the honor of a true man, and despite the fact that the enduring cannibals could not destroy, he proposes to let her decide which of the men she will live with in the future. Legally Mrs. Kyle is the wife of Mr. Raines; but, of course, she was justified in her second marriage, and Mr. Raines cannot consistently claim her. He is manly enough to say that he will not disturb their happiness, and he has gone to Cambridge, Guernsey County, to see his child. He will then return to Caldwell, and leave the decision entirely with his wife. Mr. Raines is a man of fine appearance, and is highly spoken of by those who know him. He is a brother of Mrs. Dr. Hamilton, of this village.—Barnesville (Ohio) Enterprise.

Never to tell her, never let her know,

THE wife of a Hartford clergyman thought her pretty servant girl was becoming too intimate with the owner of the tenement where they lived, a widower, who occupied rooms in the same building, and, finally, in a fit of indignation, said: "Pack up your things and leave my house." The girl left her employer that very afternoon, and entering said to her late mistress, "I am Mrs ——; now pack up your things and leave my house. The servant girl had married the landlord, and the order was enforced.

THE SENTINEL.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

ON BROADWAY.

See! Young America, to active arms
With bundles laden,
Exerting to a slippled kind of way
A pretty maiden.
Often she drops a yard or two behind
Before he's missed her,
Ah! her relationship is plain—
His sister.

And close behind the couple we have seen
Appears another
A young man with a venerable dame—
Of course, his mother:
For he has with a patronizing air
Her care enlisted,
And tells her things of which she was aware
He be excited.

Another pair, who walking far apart,
Seem somewhat cross,
He trying all the young and blooming girls
With admiration;
She with a weary air, and loaded down
With goods he should have carried.
Seems filled with care, alas! for he and she
These two are married.

One couple more—their hands are slyly clasped,
Their eyes are downcast,
The glances of sardonic passersby
Are all unnoticed;
Her eyes [illegible] of the radiant sky
Look fondly into his. Come, let us go,
These two are married.

—N. Y. Sun.

GOOD-NIGHT.

Good keep you safe, my little love
All through the night;
Heat clouds in the evening skies
Dim the light.
My heart is with you as I kneel to pray,
Good-night! God keep you in His care away.

Thick shadows creep like silent ghosts
Along the wall;
I lose myself in misty dreams,
While restless
The moon rides slowly through the window bars
A silver sickle gleaming 'mid the stars.

For, though I am far away,
Feel safe and strong
To trust you thus, dear love—and yet—
The night is long
I'll say with sobbing lips the old fond prayer,
Good-night! Sweet dreams! God keep you ever
dear.

—Mary B. Higham, in Churchman.

"HANG THE BABY."

"Then you won't go, Alice?"

"No, Herbert—I am sorry—but the baby!"

"Oh, hang the baby!" and Herbert flung out of the room, slamming the door behind him.

Alice stood looking at the door, growing whiter and whiter. Then she gave a heart-breaking cry, fell on her knees by the cradle, and hiding her face in her hands, sobbed bitterly.

She had looked forward so long to going to this particular party. It was given by Mrs. Mountjoy, one of the leaders in society, and to be present was to be in the political, diplomacy or literature, as well as distinguished in the fashionable world, were sure to be there. She had been kept at home so much since baby had been born that she really felt the need of a little variety and relaxation. But some of them she felt in the case of a little outing; and finally, in a fit of indignation, said: "Pack up your things and leave my house." The girl left her employer that very afternoon, and entering said to her late mistress, "I am Mrs ——; now pack up your things and leave my house. The servant girl had married the landlord, and the order was enforced.

All the light went out of her sister's eyes; her hands fell.

"Alice! Can you not go, dear."

"Good! Don't be angry, because I'm glad, for we can have such a nice little chat. You didn't expect me."

"Of course I didn't."

"Well, I didn't think of coming, as you know, for a month yet. But I thought it would be so nice to surprise you."

"Oh! I'm so glad."

"And then Paul is coming," she said, blushing, "next week, to stay a month; he has business here, and he wanted me so badly to be here too. I declare," she said, laughing, "I'll have to marry him soon to get rid of him."

"Oh, Mabel! don't marry him unless you're certain you'll be happy?" cried Alice, hysterically. "Be sure, first, he won't go to parties, and be—ave—ave a—lone with his baby," she sobbed.

"What is Herbert at a party?" queried Mabel, quite subdued.

"Yes, he is; and when I told him I couldn't go on account of baby, he said, 'hang the baby!' Yes, you little angel, your own father said those awful words—and then he sl—slammed the door."

"He's a viper!" exclaimed Mabel, with sudden vehemence. "A nice way to treat a wife. I'm sure I never like that! But why couldn't you leave baby?"

"Because he was threatened with croup last week."

"But he's well enough now—sleeps delicately. He'll not wake up all the night, perhaps. And the nurse would have taken good care of him."

"I should have been thinking of fire, and all that."

"Oh, nonsense! You ought to have gone. But Herbert had no right to be jealous; and Alice he must be punished;" and Mabel threw her wraps on the bed, and took her seat by the glowing fire. "I won't do it to let him get the upper hand. And I have it. I've thought of a splendid plan. A charming, delightful little plot," and she clapped her hands in glee.

"Oh, Mabel, what is it?" and Alice slid down at her sister's feet, gazing in her face with expectant smiles. "What are you going to do?"

"I'm not going to do it. I shall stay here and watch baby. You are going to the party."

"Mabel! impossible!"

"Quite possible. In fact it must be done. You must let Herbert see that you're as pretty as ever, and can shine as much admired. It is decided. You are to go the party and play a part. Let me arrange the programme."

"But, Mabel, I haven't a dress prepared—or anything. I gave up going a week ago, you see, when going was mentioned with the croup."

"Pshaw! You shall wear one of mine, one of the most bewitching, bewildering of dresses, bought from my last allowance from Uncle Curtis. Only to see it will throw you into ecstacies. Your own dear, old-fashioned pet will look more lovely. I want to see it on you. Come, come, call your maid; I am all impatience. We'll shame our husbands into good behavior, see if we don't. No firesolution, pretty sister, mine. I'll stay at home and fancy myself mistress here, and count your pictures, vases and pretty things, and catalogue them, so as to make mamma happy with a letter to-morrow. Order John, or Jack, or Bill, or whoever your coachman is, to get the carriage—if that's impossible, send for a cab."

In less than an hour Mabel led her sister to the great French mirror, and laughingly introduced her to the lovelit face and best-dressed woman she had ever seen.

Alice trembled a little when she found herself actually on the way to Mrs. Mountjoy's; but her sister's urgent will had conquered, and her heart was hardened by Herbert's emphatic expression concerning the baby. She was reassured, however, by Mrs. Mountjoy's hearty welcome.

"So glad you've come, my dear," she said. "Your husband said he feared baby would keep you at home, but I told him I was all powerful. You did right to reconsider the matter."

Herbert, like many handsome society men, was a little spoiled and selfish without knowing it. He loved Alice devotedly; but he was not unwilling to receive the sweet smiles and honeyed words of others; while, with a man's inconsistency, he was not desirous that his wife should play the part of a married belle.

It was while he was dancing with one of the most noted and beautiful women of the metropolis, who was more than willing to listen to his assurance, that Herbert, looking up from the face leaning against his shoulder, while the dreamy waltz music "thrilled lovesensitive to sadness as to joy," encountered the sparkling face of his wife, and saw her arrayed in the freshest and most graceful costume in the room. She was moving quietly along with an escort in uniform.

"Pray, don't stumble," said his partner, petulantly, for from that moment the grand repose of his manner was gone, and the lady on his arm might have been made of wax, or any other ductile material, for all he cared now.

"How the dickens came she here?" he muttered to himself, as he led his partner, absently, to a seat, deaf to all her pretty words, blind to her fascinations. "It certainly is Alice—but that dress—the prettiest thing here! and I left her quite determined not to come. I don't understand it. Dancing with that military puppy. Guinnett, too. She knows I hate him."

With these amiable thoughts, he had himself cut to gain the attention of his wife, and make her explain. It was some time before he had the chance, so he was obliged to content himself with following her graceful motions, angry with himself and with her.

"Alice! Can I have one my eyes?" he said, at last, in the pause of the dance.

"I should think you might rather." was the nonchalant reply.

"Pray how did you come?"

"Pray, how did you come? I rode. Did you walk?"

"Well, but—"

"Excuse me. I'm engaged four deep already;" and Herbert was forced to move aside, as a pompous acquaintance claimed her hand.

"I'd like to knock that fellow down," he muttered, angry in earnest.

Another pause, and another tête-a-tête. No satisfaction given Herbert but simply that she came to redeem his dancing engagements.

"About the baby, Alice?" he asked anxiously.

She put her rosy lips to his ear, and in a subdued voice, exclaimed:

"Hang the baby!"

Herbert started and changed color. To be sure he had used the same language; but from her it was too exasperating. How he got through the evening he could hardly tell. When, at last, they were together in the carriage, driving home, there might have been an open register for the determinet calmness of Alice, who took everything as a matter of course.

One glance in the beautiful nursery assuaged his eyes. There by the fire sat Mabel, in all the abandon of a negligee toilet, her hair in crimps falling over her shoulders, while the little fellow on her lap, clutching at the long, shining curl, crowed and laughed as well as he could for "auntie's" smothering kisses.

A sudden revulsion of feeling came to the father's heart at sight of this sweet home-picture.

"Ah! I know who contrived the plot," he said. "But I am glad to see you, Mabel, nevertheless."

"What's the belle of the ball?" answered Mabel, saucily.

"There's no doubt of that. At any rate, I didn't get a chance to dance with her."

"Of course. Who ever heard, in society, of dancing with one's wife?" she said, sarcastically. "I see that she followed my directions implicitly. You must learn, sir, that a house divided against itself cannot stand—that is, if one-half is flirting at a party and the other half at home crying her eyes out."

"Oh, Alice—were you really?"

"I should think she was. I can assure you that I thought our half the house dissolved in tears, and so wretched that—"

"Mabel, hush!" said Alice, imploringly.

"Traitor, do you turn on me," exclaimed Mabel, with mock displeasure.

"My child," she went on, tossing the crowing cherub, "tell your selfish papa that he has also some obligations, and that if you just behave yourself, he will be the bone of contention in this family, you'd have staid in the garden of angels, where you were wanted."

Herbert was strongly affected by this upbraiding outburst, but it had the effect of leading him to see his duty in a new light. Leaving him to reflect; opened his eyes to his selfishness, and made him, from that evening, a home and more considerate husband.

Six months from that time Alice was dressed for a party. But this time the party was given at her own house, and it is home of Mabel's marriage. Even the bride did not look lovelier; for nothing now occurred to mar Alice's happiness; and laughingly, after all, is the best preservative of beauty.

"Ah! how charming you look," whispered Mabel, with an arch glance, as they passed each other in the dance.

"Prettier, even, and it is saying a great deal, than when I cursed your husband, by sending you to Mrs. Mountjoy's party."—Alice Gray, in Rural New Yorker.

The Reason Why.

THE reason Mr. Baslinger won't speak to any of the editors of the Breakaway, when he meets them, is this: Last Thursday morning he came into the office with a poem, beginning, "Oh, softly the moonlight sleeps on the clover," and told us, as he carelessly tossed it on the table, that it was "only a little he just dashed off as he was coming down this morning; hardly worth fixing up; hadn't time to polish it off as he wanted to take it just as he threw it off, all right." We took it and published it, and the next night, at the church sociable, his wife met us and said, "And oh, wasn't that a sweet little poem of Frederic's? And you know, he worked on that from eight o'clock Wednesday evening until half-past three in the morning, and wouldn't let a soul of us come into the room, and then he made the last copy of it into his note-book at the breakfast table. Why do editors always prefer hand-penciled copy to

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Aug. 2, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

There is a saying used in this city for a "Burglar's Blue Ribbon Total Abstinence Society," by which the condition of this class might be ameliorated, and the dangers of their arduous calling in some degree lessened. No one can fail to sympathize with the sorrows of their overworked profession, the members of which gain their daily bread through the laborious use of pistol and "jimmy" frequently exposed to the damp night air, the teeth of the vicious watch dog, the bullet of the reckless and quarrelsome householder, and the oftelons nerve-destroying screech of the suddenly awaking female. To these perils, also, the unobservant and purely theoretical writer on the subject might, perhaps, add another springing from the coincidences of the prime force. But this would be such an error as could only arise from a fundamental misapprehension of the nature of the force, at least in this city. The New York policeman is entirely harmless and inoffensive, except toward women and children. He fully recognizes that the burglar is a man and a brother, born "free and equal," in strict accordance with the provisions of the Constitution. He, therefore, feels it his duty to exercise toward the latter the largest spirit of toleration, and makes it a point never to interfere with him, if possible. Nothing short of a burglar's running violently into a policeman, or shooting at him will attract the latter's attention. Then, indeed, forbearance ceases to be a virtue, and the blue coat, unless unusually long suffering, sometimes shoots back, generally taking care, however, to lodge his bullet in the person of some third party by way of avoiding accidents.

It may thus be seen that my enumeration of the ordinary risks of the cracksman's vocation was tolerably complete, but unfortunately, a new and extraordinary one has arisen, which seems to demand the immediate renunciation of the flowing bowl by the fraternity. And this was the way of it.

When those lucky folks with money go out of town for the summer, they lock up their houses and leave them as dainty tit-bits for the burglars, who deeply appreciative of the implied invitation, usually drop in occasionally during the summer, and gratefully remove such articles as they chance to need or fancy. Thus it was with a Mr. Sweezy, whose family have been for the past month or so cooling themselves by the sea wave, and who during this period has been in the habit of making lightsome visits to his deserted city mansion for the purpose, I presume, of seeing how rapidly his valuables disappeared. On his last tour of inspection Tuesday morning, Mr. Sweezy found the basement door off its hinges, and mounting to his own apartment discovered two men sprawled upon his own bed, both with their boots on and both snoring disgracefully. Scattered upon the floor was a very miscellaneous litter, comprising among other things, five large, empty but still odorous champagne bottles. Mr. Sweezy took in the situation at a glance, and became instantly indignant at the flagrant breach both of hospitality and good manners of which his visitors had been guilty. Leaving a friend to watch the latter, he at once sallied forth, and meeting two policemen, succeeded in convincing them that they would be justified in apprehending burglars who had so far forgotten themselves as to get hopelessly drunk and go to bed with their boots on. The latter were, therefore, gently awakened, and, on recovering partial consciousness, requested the officers, in accents thick, to "open another bottle." This demand was, however, not complied with, but, on the contrary, the ribbon burglars themselves were shaken up like a gin cocktail and marched off to the station house, whence they will emigrate to Sing Sing via the County Court room.

This is why I say there is need for a temperance crusade among the burglars, and Mr. John B. Gough is hereby respectfully invited to prepare a lecture especially suited to their needs.

A scheme which if not entirely practicable at least bent a considerable and pleasant one to discuss this warm weather, is Prof. Schroeder's proposed balloon trip to Europe, a feat which if its projector's plans are successful, will be attempted within a few weeks. Ever since the Graphic newspaper's memorable balloon fizzle, projects of this kind have been received by the public with pitying and incredulous contempt, and Schroder's forms no exception to the rule. And yet this experienced aeronaut feels as certain of the success of his present undertaking as though no failures had preceded it. He claims to have discovered as the result of years of study and observation, that there are two elevated air currents, one above another, the lower of which blows continually from West to East and the upper one in the reverse direction. All he has to do is to raise his balloon to the one or the other by means of fans worked by a magnetic engine, and then slip quietly across the ocean in forty eight hours. He says that just as soon as he has made his trial trips, he is going to get up a company and build air-ships enough to establish a regular service between the two continents, two a day starting from either side and carrying mails and passengers, thus defying sea sickness and reducing the swift ocean steamers to the despised level of slow freight boats. Wish he would complete his arrangement before the close of the Paris Exposition, as that those of us who are pressed for time could leave the office some breezy forenoon, whisk over to the Champs el Mars, and attend the big show for an hour, and get back to tea.

Another cool and reasonable performance, much more sensible than rowing, wrestling or horse racing under the broad sun, was that accomplished one day this week by one Russell, an expert diver, who for a considerable wager walked 8 miles within five hours on the bottom of the East River. He wore a diving dress supplied with air by means of a pump and tube and walked the appointed distance over a course one-sixth of a mile long, stacked on the river's bed and largely frequented, so the diver reports, by big flounders, lobsters and crabs. He rather expected to fall in with a shark during his submarine stay, several of these monsters having lately been seen in the river, and therefore carried a big butcher's cleaver and a spear for protection, but neither of these weapons were needed. After the completion of his task the pedestrain was much exhausted, but having won his bet, quickly recovered, and is now ready to do it all over again for the same money.

A vivid reminder of the man whose lot it was to precipitate the panic of 1873 is afforded to us by the meeting this week of a committee of Jay Cooke's creditors to hear a report from the trustee of the estate and discuss plans for closing it up. Nothing definite was accomplished but it may be interesting to learn that the claims against the estate aggregate over $8,000,000, and that it has about $300,000 to manage it for five years. The dividend will be small.

RADIX.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you,—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of Liver Complaint, or Dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents. Three dose s will relieve you.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the Liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. For sale by Geo. W. Crouter.

THE INVESTIGATION.

THE LOUISIANA SUB-COMMITTEE.

On the 16th, A. J. Reynolds testified that he walked with Mrs. Jenks at Donaldsonville, in 1867, from Weber's house to the hotel. Mrs. Jenks asked him if he didn't think D. A. Weber had the finest letter on his person when killed. Had a conversation with D. A. Weber after the election, in fall witness he was and going to make a protest.

John Clegg, of Lafayette Parish, Secretary of the Senate, testified that time was no printed or original returns of Supervisor Veazey made up by witness at Veazey's request; Veazey swore to them and brought them to New Orleans, where another set was made, throwing out three polls and giving for Republicans 600 more votes than the original statement.

J. W. Armstead (colored), of West Feliciana Parish, testified that Semmes sidlavit before the Returning Board, and it was prepared in the Custom-House; witness never read it, and now denies many of the statements made therein.

Andrew Damon (colored), Republican, of West Feliciana, testified regarding the organization of Democratic colored clubs in the parish, believed from the fact the Democrats would carry the parish; the negroes complained of bad pavements, etc.; made affidavit in the Custom-House after the election; the affidavit was not read to him, and he did not know what they put in the paper. The affidavit being read in Mr. Stenger's testimony, most of the statements made therein, and said he did not say the other things were made such statements.

Thomas Sessard (colored), of West Feliciana, sworn in St. James Parish before election, and did not vote; after the election was subpœnaed to come to the city and make affidavit; was brought to the Custom-House, but asked him to question; kept him there all day, and finally called him to sign a paper, and then swore him; he did not read it, but it was put down; they didn't read it to him; couldn't read himself. The affidavit as published being read to witness, he denied almost every statement therein contained, saying that he did not tell them anything. Witness knew of many colored men who like himself joined the conservatives.

SEVERAL witnesses were introduced, on the 17th, to prove the bad character of Hiram Smedley, who testified a few days before that he had seen Joseph W. Jones sign Weber's name to the Anderson-Weber agreement, that no one else was present and that Jones is now dead.

Ex-Chief of Police Lee testified that he knew Smedley, and would believe him under oath.

Ex-Post. Att'y Beckwith testified that he had refused to receive Smedley as a witness on an important case, because he did think he should be a witness in such a case.

Twenty witnesses testified that Smedley's character was bad, and gave from a variety of reasons.

Mayor Seymour, Notary Pollock, contradicted the statement made by Smedley a few days ago in the Custom-House, that he was present at the Anderson-Weber agreement was false, and that Smedley had no conversation in his presence with him.

John S. Dale, colored, of West Feliciana Parish, said that he was in Donaldsonville before election, and he was invited to meeting, but didn't go; heard a speech at the meeting; the meeting closed during intermission; understood that Mr. Weber had gone to Baton Rouge; was not present at the meeting; heard Weber say that he was going to Washington; was not present when Weber said how much money other bolts were money, but Weber borrowed ten dollars of witness, reminded witness of the money which was paid to bolts by Weber, bolts remarked that had he didn't receive it as a bribe but as a loan.

E. L. Weber was recalled. "Heard the testimony of Bob Dale. He followed, that I attempted to bribe a false. Attempted loaning Bob money, as Mr. Mayhew testified.

Testimony was introduced to show that Seymour, the notary, and E. L. Jenks were acquaintances.

T. J. M. CLARKE (colored), formerly Recorder of Mortgages in West Feliciana, testified, on the 18th, that E. L. Weber, in two or three former interviews with him, wanted witness to recant the testimony given before the House Committee; the testimony then given was true; Weber offered him $175 and a position at seventy-five dollars a month if he would help to put him Weber's. Dale also asked witness to go with Weber and said Weber was to give him Dale $500 to testify. Witness was certain there was never any organization of negroes to purchase arms for the purpose of murdering the whites, and that the colored people there never met together for an unlawful purpose; he denied acts of, and violence, as made such statements.

Thomas Sessard (colored), of West Feliciana, sworn in St. James Parish before election, and did not vote; after the election was subpœnaed to come to the city and make affidavit; was brought to the Custom-House, but asked him to question; kept him there all day, and finally called him to sign a paper, and then swore him; he did not read it, but it was put down; they didn't read it to him; couldn't read himself. The affidavit as published being read to witness, he denied almost every statement therein contained, saying that he did not tell them anything. Witness knew of many colored men who like himself joined the conservatives.

The editor of the Port Huron (Ont.) Times, says was one of the Canadian Press Association excursionists who lately stopped at Charlevoix has this to say about our town:

"About five o'clock, tea was served, and the party allowed a couple of hours on shore, while the steamer took on wood, at Charlevoix, quite a brisk little place, with, we were informed, a good agricultural country around it and several Indian settlements. Our party wandered all over the village—bought more curiosities to encumber them, and spent their time very pleasantly. The village having three Orange Lodges, (?) a pic nic had been held that day, and it looked somewhat like home to see so many moving about with their regalia on and colors flying at their button-hole. The place being all but isolated, and telegraph messages having to be repeated at so many points, no news from Canada had been received, but was anxiously looked for. In the course of our wanderings, we found the village boasted a very respectable newspaper, and the editor being absent two of our party left little items for him "set up" in a "stick," being the most either of them had set at one time in a number of years. As leaving time approached we "gathered" again "at the River" and found Mr. Smith, the editor of the Sentinel, whose office we had just visited, waiting to see us. We found him a live, enterprising fellow, and we were only sorry his business engagements prevented him from going on to Chicago with us."

A letter has been received at New York from Frederick Bent, the cornet soloist of Gilmore's band, stating that the party met with very hard luck in Germany, and has disbanded for want of funds. In England and Ireland the band did fairly, but its business in France and Germany was very poor. To add to their troubles, their advance agent, who was sent to Germany to advertise their coming, ran off with $3000, and they arrived in the fatherland utterly unheralded. The men have not been paid their salaries, and are writing home for money with which to return.

A teacher asked one of her pupils "who was the strongest man?" Jonah," he replied "because the whale could not hold him down after he had swallowed him. Not so with biscuits made with Smith's Saleratus. They are nice to the eye pleasant to the taste and sweet to stomach. It is made by a new process by Henry S. Smith & Co.

C. & B. keep Smith's Saleratus.

The Wisconsin Republican platform given forth no uncertain sound upon the financial question. Its declaration of principles is admirable.

Mrs. Grant is growing very stout in her travels abroad. She weighs 174 pounds to the General's 168.

Mr. McCoskry, ex Bishop of the diocese of Michigan, sailed for Europe on Saturday, the 20th inst. To a reporter he said that he did not know how long he would be absent, nor where he would travel. It is quite probable that the fallen Bishop will never return to the scenes of his disgrace.

Mr. Barnum rakes in $20,000 a week, by his show. This shows that his show makes a good show, and that, at its close, as in its course, there will be a big show.

C. & B. are receiving goods by every boat, their stock is always fresh and prices reasonable.

The Secretary of the Treasury is in excellent spirits over the satisfactory and constantly improving financial situation and prospects. He confidently believes that the coming autumn will witness a revival of general trade and industry, and that a long season of prosperity will follow the resumption of specie payments, which is practically already accomplished. The only serious drawback to such an encouraging outlook is the senseless but mischievous agitation that is being kept up by the class of politicians who call themselves "Greenbackers."

The Marquis of Lorne, husband of the Princess Louise, of England, has been appointed Governor General of Canada. The new Governor is a young man of 33, is very popular, and will fitted for his new and responsible position.

Governor Butler has made the important discovery that all the good men in the country belong to the national party. They are all anxious to reform the abuses that have crept into the government, but what they would do if they got in he is not prepared to say. In regard to his own candidacy as the Presidential standard bearer of the political saints he is discretely silent.

Republican County Convention

A Republican County Convention to nominate candidates for County officers, will be held at the Town Hall in the village of Charlevoix, on Thursday the 5th day of September, 1878, at one o'clock in the afternoon. Each Township will be entitled to one delegate for every twenty registered voters, and every fraction of twenty over ten. Each delegation will bring, in addition to their credentials a certified copy of the number of voters in their respective Townships. The County Committee, at their last meeting, passed the following resolution:

Resolved; That we recommend to the several Township Committees that that they give at least six days notice of their caucuses by posting written notices in at least three of the most conspicuous places in the Township.

That there may be a full and fair representation of the Republican voters, it is hoped that the recommendation will be strictly observed.

ROBERT MILLER,
Chairman Rep. Co. Com.

Charlevoix, Aug. 12, 1878.

At the "National" Congressional Convention held at Bay City last week, Capt. J. S. Andrews, of Little Traverse, was a delegate from Emmet county. In the report of the Committee on Credentials it was recommended that said Andrews be allowed to cast the votes of Charlevoix, Cheboygan, and other counties, which were unrepresented. The recommendation was considered in all seriousness by the convention, and rejected. The convention must have been composed of representative Michigan bull-heads, on a par with Andrews himself, to place Charlevoix county in the 8th Congressional District. But if it had been as they supposed, the very stones of Charlevoix County would cry out in anguish at the thought of having any portion of her people represented by a —s—by Andrews.

SPECIAL SCHOOL MEETING.—There will be a special School meeting held at the School house in the village of Charlevoix next Friday evening, August 16th, to determine the number of months of school that shall be held the coming school year in School District No. 1.

COUNTY CONVENTION.—At the County Convention held in this village Saturday the Townships of Charlevoix, Marlon, Wilson, South Arm, and Eveline were represented. Norwood came with two contesting delegations, representing respectively the Wood and Harris, factions, so called, of that Township. The convention rejected the credentials of both, but the leaders of the two delegations being allowed to alternately select delegates, Norwood was represented. The following is the result of their deliberations, in the selection of delegates to the several conventions:

Congressional.—F. J. Meech, —alternate, W. A. Smith.

Senatorial.—Byron See, W. A. Smith.

Representative.—O. D. Wood, John Ward, H. H. Hipp.

THE RESORT.—There are seventy two people stopping at the Resort.

—Ten lots have been secured at the Resort by people who propose to erect cottages thereon next summer.

—The Baptist people hold Praise Meetings in the grove at the Resort every Sunday afternoon. They will hold regular religious service at the same place next Sunday morning at the usual hour, preaching by one of the ministers on the grounds.

RELIGIOUS.—Rev. Mr. Kettridge, a Unitarian minister of Muskegon, preached at the M. Church last Sabbath morning. He will also occupy the same pulpit next Sabbath morning.

—Rev. Mr. Engle Episcopal, will occupy the M. E pulpit next Sabbath evening.

—One week from next Sabbath is the last Quarterly Meeting of this Conference year.

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

ON the 23d, the Treasury Department made another call for 5-20 bonds of 1865. Amount, $2,000,000; interest to cease Oct. 31.

THE Agricultural Bureau at Washington states that the wool clip this year is 3 per cent. greater than that of 1877.

AT EAST St. Louis, on the evening of the 23d, a squad of Metropolitan Police and a party of Deputy-Marshals had an armed encounter in the public streets of that city, during which from fifty to 100 shots were fired and several persons seriously wounded. The Governor ordered the Belleville Guards to preserve order, and they reached the scene of the trouble a little before midnight.

ACCORDING to a Baker City (Ore.) telegram of the 20th, Gen. Howard's forces and Forsyth's command had effected a junction, and would immediately pursue the fleeing hostiles, who were moving toward Malheur Agency.

A PETITION has recently been made to the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative to the Kansas Pacific Railroad lands. It is in favor of settlers who have pre-empted railroad lands when situated and sold at the end of the third year after the completion of that road. This decision affects the status of many thousand sales which have been made by the several Pacific Railroad Companies, whose charters contained the same clause as that of the Kansas Pacific, providing that if any of the granted lands remained unsold by the company at the expiration of three years from the completion of the road such lands should be subject to preemption entry at $1.25 an acre.

THE receipts of the Government from internal revenue for the year ending June 30, 1878, were $110,089,403 00, or $7,305,864 34 less than that of the preceding year.

A COURIER arrived at Baker City, Ore., on the 20th, with intelligence from Gen. Howard, to the effect that the Bannock and Piute Indians had separated. The former were fleeing the country, while the latter were supposed to be making for their agency, for the purpose of surrendering. A Salt Lake City dispatch of same date says there were indications of hostiles returning in that direction.

THE Stage-coach which left Deadwood, for Cheyenne, on the 23d, was stopped on the road by six armed men, who captured the mail-bags and rifled them of their contents.

IN Washington, on the morning of 26th, the members of the organization known as the Independent Labor League of the District of Columbia initiated a strike, because of the refusal of the contractors for digging the foundation for the new building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, to pay laborers more than seventy-five cents a day. The strikers drove the few men at work from the ground. The next day the police protected the laborers and quite a number of strikers, subsequently arrested the leader, Isaac Cohen, who was released on promising to have his men disperse and to hold no more riotous meetings. He was again arrested while addressing a meeting, on the evening of the 27th, and locked up, and several other arrests were made on the morning of the 28th.

THE New York Times of the 28th, gives the particulars of a terrible crime, which had just been made public, but which was committed some months previous. It seems that a married lady of Boston, of great refinement and beauty, had been visiting friends in the interior of New York State, and when leaving for home took a drawing-room car on the New York Central Road for Albany. She was followed into the car by two villains, who were probably attracted by the valuable jewelry she wore, and when the conductor appeared they informed him that the lady was insane, and that they were her friends conveying her to the asylum at Utica. On arriving at that place they conveyed her from the cars, she swooning away as the train left her to a disremutable house and robbed her and subjected her to the grossest indignity and outrage. When the train arrived at Albany, her husband learned of his wife's attempted infamy, and immediately started for Utica on a special engine. He soon ascertained the whereabouts of his wife, and found her in a woeful condition, her mind being seriously injured by her terrible experience. Every effort has since been made, consistent with privacy, to discover the fiends, but so far without avail.

EARLY on last June, a Deputy United States Marshal, attended in three days by two same Collectors, attempted to arrest a man in Pickens County, S. C., on a charge of illicitly distilling whisky. One of the Collectors shot the accused under an alleged forcible resistance to the officers, and was killed. The four men were indicted for murder, and a counter-information was sworn out of the case between the State and Federal Courts, the State authorities contending for the jurisdiction of the case in State Courts. Judge Kershaw refused to grant a writ of transfer in the United States Circuit Court. It was then carried at Washington, on the 27th, to insist upon the transfer of the case to the latter court, and measures would be taken accordingly.

ON the 29th, the President of the Board of Health, of New Orleans, reported that the yellow fever prevailed to that city to such an extent that it would not be proper to issue clear bills of health to vessels leaving that port. Up to noon, on that day, the total cases reported were eighty, and the deaths thirty-three. Quarantine had been established at most of the ports on the Mississippi below Cairo.

THE conditions were very favorable for the astronomical observations of the eclipse of the sun, on the 29th, especially on the line of totality in the Western States and Territories. Prof. Colton, of the Chicago Astronomical Society, reports that his observations at Denver tend to show that the moon's path in the heavens lay a little further to the southward than indicated by the lunar tables, or else that the estimate of the moon's diameter is too large—perhaps both. The duration there of the totality was two minutes, forty and one-half seconds—three and one-half seconds less than the computed time. The measures made by Mr. Easterday indicated that the corona extended out, on an average, about twenty-six minutes of arc, corresponding to a distance of fifty THOUSAND miles, all around the sun. The chromosphere was also hastily seen by Prof. Hough, indicating a thickness of some 2,000 miles. The protuberances were much less prominent than at most of the recent eclipses. The scarcity of red lines tends to confirm the theory of connection with sun-spots, this present time being near the minimum of such spots. No signs of Vulcan were discovered by any of the parties at Denver. Prof. Watson, of Ann Arbor, Mich., was at Separation, Wyo. Ty., and discovered an intra-Mercurial planet of the size of a four and a half-magnitude star, about two and a half degrees eastward of the sun. Mr. Leckyer, who was with Prof. Watson, says the corona was ten times brighter than in 1871, showing a great variation of such brightness between the maximum and minimum period of sun spots. On this occasion the corona vanished instantly, while in 1871 it remained visible for several minutes after totality. Edison's experiments at Rawlins with the tasimeter are said to have been quite satisfactory. The observations at Fort Worth, Tex., were a perfect success. Several photographs of the eclipse were taken in different localities.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE National Greenback Labor party of Ohio met in State Convention at Columbus, on the 23d, and adopted a platform reaffirming the Toledo declaration of principles, and denouncing as crimes against the people the demonetization legislation of Congress during the past few years; demanding that the Government shall issue a full legal-tender paper currency; the withdrawal of all National Bank notes; the passage of a graduated income tax; the repeal of the Resumption act; the unlimited coinage of gold and silver, the abolishment and prohibition of all legalized monopolies; denouncing alike the Communists which declare for equal divisions of property and the infamous financial legislation which takes all from the many to enrich the few; favoring the establishment of Bureaus of Statistics and the employment of competent persons to inquire into and report the condition and and wages of the working classes in all the departments of industry; opposing any further issue of interest-bearing bonds; deprecating all violent measures, and invoking the people to redress their cruel wrongs only through the ballot-box. Andrew Roy was nominated for Secretary of State, Clifton A. White for Judge of the Supreme Court and J. R. Pallin for Member of the Board of Public Works.

OVER 20,000 people were present at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Reunion at Newark, Ohio, on the 24th. Among the distinguished personages present were President Hayes and Gen. Sherman.

THE recent Democratic State Convention of Texas nominated Judge O. M. Roberts for Governor, Joseph D. Sayers for Lieutenant-Governor and Geo. McCormick for Attorney-General.

THE National party of New York met in State Convention at Syracuse, on the 25th. There were three contesting delegations from New York, and a motion was adopted excluding them all. A platform was adopted similar to that of the Ohio Nationals. The name "National Greenback Labor Party" was agreed to. Among the resolutions adopted was one declaring it to be the duty of the State Legislature to limit the growth of all combinations, and one favoring a protective tariff and the prohibition of the importation of all manufactured articles of which the raw materials are produced and labor to manufacture the same is found in this country. Gideon J. Tucker was nominated for Judge of the Court of Appeals.

THE Nebraska Republican State Convention, for the nomination of a State ticket, is to be held on the 1st of October.

THE New Hampshire House of Representatives has recently passed a bill for the punishment of tramps, which provides a penalty of imprisonment for from fifteen months to five years, the former penalty being for any person proved a tramp.

THE Commissioner of Agriculture has appointed the following Board of Examiners to investigate the origin of, and devise a remedy for, the hog cholera: Prof. Law, of New York; Prof. Detmars, of Chicago; Dr. Dyer, of Ottawa, Ill.; Dr. J. W. Voyles, of Indiana; Dr. Albert Dunlap, of Iowa; Dr. Hines, of Kansas, and Dr. Salmon, of North Carolina.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made, on the 26th, that J. H. McVicker, the well-known theatrical manager, of Chicago, had filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. The immediate cause of the failure is said to have been the judgment of $57,000 against him and others as bondsmen of Isaac, the defaulting City Treasurer. The total liabilities, including this judgment, are $650,000

FOREIGN.

A ROME dispatch of the 23d says the Vatican was about to place the Church in the United States under the immediate care of the Pope.

IN the British House of Commons, on the 23d, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced the approaching marriage of the Duke of Connaught, Queen Victoria's third son, with the Princess Marie Louise, daughter of Prince Frederick Charles, of Prussia, and asked for the usual grant. Notice was given that the Radicals would oppose the grant.

THE Queen has conferred the Order of the Garter on the Marquis of Salisbury.

SOME of the British Turkophile Radicals caused the presentation to the House of Commons, on the 25th, of a petition calling for the impeachment of Lord Beaconsfield.

A VIENNA telegram of the 26th says the attempts to organize resistance to the Austrians in Herzegovina had collapsed.

ACCORDING to a Constantinople telegram of the 27th, Austria had abandoned the idea of a convention with Turkey in respect to the occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, but would first occupy, and then send a note to the Porte, notifying it of her intentions.

THE Pan-Anglican Conference adjourned on the 27th.

THE Marquis of Lorne, son-in-law of Queen Victoria, has been appointed Governor-General of Canada, to succeed Lord Dufferin.

IN the British Parliament, on the evening of the 29th, Lord Barrington moved resolutions ensuring the Government for its share in the Berlin Treaty, and denouncing the terms of the Anglo-Turkish convention, by means of which the Island of Cyprus was obtained.

THE Austrian troops crossed the Bosnian frontier, on the 30th, meeting with no opposition either from the Turkish troops or the Bosnian insurgents.

Sprinkling the Streets.

Mr. Trevelyan, who lives on Court street, has had trouble lately with his garden-hose. Since the introduction of the Holly Water system, it has been the delight of Mr. Trevelyan to turn himself into a pipeman at sunset, and with his garden-hose sprinkle the thirsty street with the clear, cool waters of the mighty Mississippi. Miss Norah Donavan, a young lady who is connected with the culinary department of Mr. Trevelyan's house, and is superintendent of domestics and general overseer of carpets, had often watched, as her duties would permit, this process of cooling down the streets at even-tide, and she had been heard to wish that this duty might be entrusted to her. She finally framed her wish in a direct petition, and last evening she entered upon the active duties of her new office.

When Miss Donavan took the nozzle from the hands of her master, it was pointed almost directly at the middle of the street, and Miss Donavan conscientiously retained it in this position, while her whole frame was convulsed with delight. Presently there came dashing down the street, in a light, open phaeton, two happy young people. In vain the music young person shouted, "Hi, there, I say, turn her off!" and in vain the female young person shrieked and essayed to hide behind a parasol no larger than a water lily. Miss Donavan only stared at them and wondered if peradventure they might be crazy, and when they passed through the spray that came out on the other side, very sad, very shaut and very damp, not to say limp. Then the gentleman who lives next door came out and called for her to be approached, intending to instruct her how to shut off the deluging stream or turn it aside when anyone approached. But Miss Donavan, hearing him call her name, said, "Sorr?" and turned about and faced him with the nozzle doing its level best, and he came in for a fine pressure on. He turned with the first shot and fled for his own door, the cooling stream following him every inch of the way, like an angel of mercy in disguise. But by the time he reached his own door, he was as thoroughly drenched that his suspenders imbibed, and Then a North Hill street car came rattling down, an open, summer car, just crowded with people coming home from a picnic at Sunnyside, and when they heard the driver shout, and then dodge, and then swear, they gave their fate and Miss Donovan, and just howled, and wailed, and screamed, and tried to get behind each other, and crept under the seats, and some of them even jumped off the car, and all of them, by their frantic gestures, wild shrieks and singular behavior, impressed Miss Donovan with the idea that they were dreadfully drunk. The street car passed on, and when it was beyond the line of Mr. Trevelyan's garden stream, the dryest man in that car could have put out a conflagration by simply leaning back against the house and sighing, the dashing City Treasurer. The total liabilities, including this judgment, are $650,000

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

ON the 25th, a man named H. Van Kleeck, aged sixty, was arrested at Saline, supposed to be drunk. It was soon discovered that he had taken laudanum, and he died in half an hour. He was supposed to be insane.
